The Radio Musical Director

By JOSEF CHERNIAVSKY

MANY years ago a very famous radio executive said, "You cannot underestimate the intelligence of the listening audience."

The effect of such brilliant thinking has influenced every phase of radio program creating. In regard to radio music it has been translated to mean, "You cannot underestimate the musical taste of the listening audience." Today the statement should read, "You cannot estimate the intelligence of the listening audience." For, up until the present time, the presentation of radio music has been so restricted to a few conventional patterns that no one knows what the public might like or not like. This is the challenge to the radio music director: to present on the air every possible new and original musical idea. If this challenge is not met we will go on and on endlessly repeating ourselves until we become as dull as a one-finger rendition of "Chopsticks."

There are in the radio business two types of music directors. One is the type who is not employed on a radio staff, but is simply responsible for the music of one particular series of programs. Johnny Green, Raymond Paige and Andre Kostelanetz are directors of this type. This director usually has a full week to worry about a half hour or less of music. He holds his position ordinarily because he is unusually adept at creating some particular type of music. It is seldom that he has the opportunity to experiment because he has been engaged to provide that particular type of music and his employers insist upon his doing just that and nothing else. He is fortunate in that he usually has the best of facilities and has ample time to prepare his music. The results are often technically brilliant, but after the novelty of a certain type of instrumentation and arrangement is gone, interest tends to decrease.

The other type of music director is one who is employed on the staff of a station or network. He is responsible not for a particular program once a week, but for every musical demand that arises from day to day. He cannot just create a style to please a certain group of listeners, but must please every taste on both sustaining and commercial programs. This director must be ready to do any job that comes up, he must be versatile, he must be familiar with every type of music from Bach to boogie-woogie. Furthermore, if he is a director—not just a conductor—he must formulate musical policies, discover and develop new ideas.

This is the type of director who, if he has the courage and ability, can do something new and creative in radio music. It is not easy, however, for most of his superiors and associates are ill with the disease of conventionality. Unless he is unusually strong and determined, he will become infected, too. Most of us are paralyzed with the fear of making a mistake; therefore we do only what has been done before. If it is a mistake, then we do not have to accept the responsibility for it.

Right now these musical directors should realize, for example, that the exploitation of arrangements—whether brilliant or bad—is no longer a creative field. Andre Kostelanetz made musical history by taking popular tunes and building them up in colorful arrangements and by taking classical forms or melodies and introducing them in new settings. But today whatever is done in arranging is just another twist on what has been done by Kostelanetz.

The staff radio music director has no right to follow these trends. He has the opportunity and therefore the responsibility to experiment with genuinely original ideas. Those directors who lack the imagination and courage to experiment are the ones who are responsible for the low level of radio music. They do not follow certain trends because they think they are pleasing the public; they do it because they have not the talent or initiative to do anything else. They merely excuse this lack of talent and initiative by claiming that they are sacrificing for the public taste.

A typical idea that radio directors must dismiss, if they are to be creative, is the illusion that we have to play and sing songs which everyone knows and can hum. From a commercial standpoint, that may be a good theory, because anything unfamiliar does have an element of risk. However, The Ballad For Americans, for example, seems to have found some considerable favor and it certainly was not music that everyone knew or could hum. Furthermore, leaders in radio must not just decide what is good today, but must give an answer to the question of what new we are creating for tomorrow in radio music. We are not doing much to answer this question if we just continue to schedule for future programs Kiss Me Again, Ah Sweet Mystery Of Life and The Indian Love Call. No matter how you dress them up in thrilling arrangements, they continue to take up time that could be filled with something new, with something that might become comparably popular tomorrow if only it were to be heard.

It is impossible to introduce this new material—this music of tomorrow—on commercial programs, because sponsors are always afraid of the unknown. Therefore it must be done by staff musical directors on sustaining periods.

If we are to have new George Gershwins, Victor Herberts and Jerome Kerns, we must introduce their music. If we are going to have new concepts in the presentation of radio music, we must take chances. We must let the public hear and decide what it likes. Most of our ideas about what the public will like and will not like are just our own ideas. We talk it over among ourselves and convince each other that the public should and would like certain things. Those who argue most convincingly give us our opinions about what the public wants. But no one can say what the public wants but the public itself and it cannot decide until it has had an opportunity to hear every variety of idea that we can present.

In contrast to the endless exploitation of arrangements, the creative radio music director today might well concentrate on human values in music. The importance of music in radio should not end with the playing of an instrument, no matter how skillfully that is done. We have not even begun to explore the possibilities of music as a reflection of every aspect of life. Little has been done to develop musical satire, musical humor or musical drama on the air. Radio music should not exist just for the sake of the music itself, but rather for the human interest it can express.

What I mean by human interest in music is illustrated by a program effort of my own which I had great trouble selling a few years ago. It was called "The Musical Camera" and attempted to portray human scenes in music. The scene is a hospital room, a child tosses feverishly, a mother sings a lullaby. There is an impression of life in music alone. On the other side of town the "Musical Camera" catches a night club scene with youngsters dancing and romancing to popular music. I mention this program only to illustrate how music can be related to life. Many, many more effective and successful ideas might evolve if new trends of thought were permitted or encouraged.

The radio industry owes it to both the listening public and to national advertisers to offer an illimitable showcase of new musical ideas. Only then can the public and advertiser really choose. Until then they must accept our verdict of what we think they should like.

The saddest words heard around radio studios are, "That's very good, that's beautiful . . ." They're sad words because they are almost always followed by the words,—"but it's not commercial." When a radio station finds something that it thinks is good and beautiful, certainly it has an obligation to put it on the air somehow, regardless of immediate commercial value. Tomorrow's commercial ideas must be developed by sustaining programs today. Otherwise how is radio to change or progress?

For practical, idealistic or moral reasons, staff radio music directors must do their part to change that often heard statement to, "That's very good, that's beautiful; we'll try it on the air." Unless they have that much confidence in their own judgment, in the future of radio and in musical values, they are not really music directors but merely marionettes who wave a baton in tempo with the theme song, "I get my check and all is well."

Adjutant to the Podium

By MISHEL PIASTRO

FOR whatever it is worth, you may credit the provocative, high-humored Oscar Levant with the super-inference that the string section of the New York Philharmonic is comprised of "thirty-six Piastros." From this premise, it would appear that Mr. Levant merely hit upon another way of implying that string players take more than occasional cues from their concertmaster. Indeed, the inference suggests a complete subservience to the attack, technique and style of the first violinist. To this, the much-concerned writer takes a more negative than positive stand.

There was an era within the recollection of many of us in which the heavy-bowing hand of the Teutonically-inspired konzertmeister held his forces in the palm of an iron fist. Time now reveals that the tyrannical Pluto of the first violinist's desk attempted to control not only the professional but also the private lives of his disciples. In general, it may be assumed that he made life a veritable Hades on and off the bandstand for his fellow musicians. Thus, in those more primitive days of control over the symphony orchestra, the members of the string section, indeed the orchestra's entire personnel—from the piccolos to the percussions—held the konzertmeister in such awe and fear that not only the first fiddles but the double basses, as well, aped him in much the same way a miming monkey responds to its master.

No doubt, and perhaps fortunately, some measure of more limited discipline still holds sway in today's orchestral bodies. Toward this end, the first duties of the contemporary concertmaster must obviously include securing the confidence of each and every string player.

Those who are aware of the strengths and weaknesses of masters of the podium may realize, to some extent, there are moments when a conductor may become so hypnotized by the score he is bringing to life, the very zealousness he projects into its interpretation is apt to run away with him. Under such circumstances, these "insiders" should simultaneously realize the score, when least expected, might get out of the conductor's hands—particularly when it is being interpreted from memory. Then, indeed, it is, that the steadying influence of the concertmaster — the more-solid-than-called-for playing of the first violinist in the first string section must be brought to bear. As a safety measure, accenting tone and rhythm, it is the only way in which the entire ensemble can be brought back from a dangerous heaven to a safer earth. Perhaps, on such occasion, it is only a highly sensitive critic or concert attendant who is equipped to know just what has happened. Notwithstanding, when it does happen, experienced musicians turn from the conductor and gratefully follow the Adjutant to the Podium. In this way, they not only save the life of the piece they are playing, but their own lives, as well, as the media of their leader. I suppose, therefore, it must be admitted that there may be some general truth to the penned observation about "the Piastros." Frankly, ad libitum is a precarious course for ensemble players to follow.

Although the string players are normally quite safe in following the tonal and rhythmic leanings of the concertmaster, I can, nevertheless, recall an experience where such adherence to the concertmaster's efforts resulted in a serio-comic disaster. I was the first man sitting at Bruno Walter's left hand in an open air concert in California some few years ago. We were engaged in playing Wagner's "Siegfried's Idyll," and all was going smoothly. My eye and my instrument had been closely following our noted conductor, then—out of a clear sky—his left hand made a motion completely foreign to the score. For a moment I, figuratively, let this motion escape me. Nevertheless, the left-handed motion was made again. This time, however, an equally illogical motion was made by the right hand. I was completely at sea; frustrated, I watched the maestro intently . . . There was a look of agony on his face. He was not beating the tempo demanded. His hands were now pleading; and I could not understand why. His eyes registered the expression of a lost soul suffering the tortures of hell . . . Suddenly, I thought that my body and soul had been transferred to those lower depths about which Gluck and Offenbach composed so well . . . I felt a hot breath on my neck, a "heavy hand" on my shoulder, and in the passing of another brief second a huge Great Dane had upset my music stand. Walter had seen the animal amiably ambling from stand to stand of the first violin section. He had attempted to warn me, lost control of himself, and his forces, in so doing and, thus, "Siegfried's Idyll" went "to the dog"—and I—to a retiring room.

Getting back to the subject of the concertmaster's duties, it might be well to restate that, within limitations, the esprit de corps of the string section partly remains the responsibility of the concertmaster. It is also true that the concertmaster must take a limited interest in the personal lives of his fellow musicians. Violin players—in fact all musicians—are creatures of human frailties in no lesser degree than other professional or business men. They have their private troubles which enter their public lives—both materially, spiritually and psychologically. A string player who has had an argument with his wife at the breakfast table is not as apt to play with such sure-handed precision and artistic integrity as one who has enjoyed his morning cup of coffee in the serene calm of domestic tranquility.

A player who has just received a contract for a solo engagement is apt to be suffering with too much elation and, in rehearsal, might play an andante passage somewhat in the spirit of a triumphal march. All this and perhaps more the concertmaster may be called upon to placate or compensate. Moreover, some conductors because of personality and an innate understanding of the members of the orchestral body—individually and collectively—are in a better position than others to get under the skins of the personnel involved.

Frankly, the matter of the esprit de corps of the entire orchestra has been partially lifted from the shoulders of the concertmaster on to the shoulders of the chief of the podium, where it more logically belongs. Relative to this, an accolade should be bestowed on John Barbirolli, the brilliant young conductor of the New York Philharmonic.

If Barbirolli were a lesser musician than the discerning student of score, the interpreter of color, rhythm and tempo, which he is, his masterful coordinating tactics would still point him out as an important figure among the titans of the conductor's desk. In my ten years with the New York Philharmonic, I have never met any conductor who could get along with his men with as little seeming effort to as high result in unifying individuals and their individual peculiarities.

If I were asked to state my opinion relative to a conductor's success with an orchestra, I should say that the respect in which he is held by those under his guidance furnishes the basis for an answer. Nevertheless, this matter of respect is subject to as many variations as that hackneyed violinist's tour de force, "The Carnival of Venice." Cooperation is, of course an essence and each and every conductor may gain or lose the cooperation of his men in devious ways.

Sometimes it is necessary for the concertmaster to employ a bit of diplomacy in order to save the conductor from embarrassing situations. During my career I have known no few wielders of the baton fevered with a penchant for lecturing to the orchestral body. This can become quite annoying and, as a matter of fact, may become a disturbing element in preparing for performance. Oftimes, a tactful word in private from the concertmaster to the conductor suggests that action rather than instruction might secure the result desired. Of necessity, this calls for the conductor's complete confidence in the concertmaster, and places the concertmaster in the position of liason officer between the conductor and the orchestra. Here it should be remembered that traditionally the concertmaster represents the biggest body in the orchestra—the strings. In this connection, it has been my pleasure to work with many of the world's outstanding conductors as Adjutant to the Podium.

Women as Conductors

By EBBA SUNDSTROM

ARE women really qualified to play any of the orchestral instruments, and are women's orchestras here to stay? These are natural questions, constantly being asked since the advent of some dozen or more women's orchestras in the United States. Because this movement represents one of the most significant developments in the history of women's progress in music, it might be interesting to consider some of the reasons why the orchestral field is one of the last opened to women.

Opportunities for women in the serious phases of the musical profession have always been rare compared to those offered in the other professions and in business. Let us eliminate, for the present, singers, solo artists and composers, and give our attention to the many other serious musicians, who have made a thorough study of one or more instruments as well as theory, and yet find little outlet for their talent and ability.

Recognizing the fact that the output of well-trained women musicians equals, and in many cases exceeds that of the men, that the talent displayed by them, their intelligence and capacity for hard work is usually rated on a par with that of the male students, what, then, becomes of them after their so-called graduation? To be sure, many give up the idea of a career upon marriage, and others are satisfied to have their accomplishments as a social and cultural asset, or a hobby. But there still are countless numbers who deserve some recognition and a fair livelihood as a reward for their efforts and expense.

Music education being one of the most expensive and lengthy courses of training upon which one can enter, it is quite natural that the ambitious woman is not satisfied to confine herself to teaching, church-work and the playing of local concert and club engagements. And most of us know that to get beyond these attainments requires financial backing, influential friends and a good start, early in life. Which brings us to the point in question—why were women, until recently not admitted to the major symphony orchestras?

The first reply would be, obviously, that the number who would qualify for such work has been too small to receive consideration. While the lighter stringed and wind instruments have been popular with the ladies for quite some time, it is only during the past decade or two that women have ventured to play the entire range of orchestral instruments. The inducement to attempt such an accomplishment was probably lacking, because of a prejudice carried down through tradition to the present day.

The great symphony orchestras of this country still have a majority of foreign-born musicians in their ranks, most of the conductors are of foreign extraction, and the Europeans are not as ready as Americans to accept women on an equal basis with men. Additional reasons for the prejudice were probably practical ones—the matter of simple dress, of being businesslike and prompt, and of not expecting any special consideration because of sex—all of which, I believe, have been overcome by the modern woman.

The prevailing theory that men must receive first consideration is reasonable, since they usually have a family dependent upon them. In this connection we are happy to note that American-born and American-trained men are gradually replacing the foreign-born in the large orchestras today. When American conductors are given an equal chance, perhaps the problem of the woman musician will be lessened. With the popularizing of symphonic music through the radio, and the organization of many new orchestras in the key cities throughout the country, the outlook for American musicians is promising indeed.

Meanwhile, women musicians have found it necessary to create their own opportunities, in order to prove their seriousness of purpose and exercise their talents. As we look back into the past we see that the idea is not new, and that it is of European origin. As long ago as 1661 there were groups of women playing in ensemble under feminine leadership, although the size of the group and the instrumentation is left pretty much to the imagination. Venice had a ladies' orchestra in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and in 1871 the Vienna Ladies, Orchestra visited America, playing a two week engagement in New York City.

The first orchestra of women to be organized in the United States was the Boston "Fadettes," of which Caroline Nichols was founder and conductor. This orchestra, which sometimes reached the size of a forty piece unit, toured the country in Lyceum, park concerts, summer resort engagements and vaudeville houses with much success, between the years 1888 and 1920. But not until 1893 was there a woman's orchestra of symphonic proportions anywhere, and to Los Angeles, Calif., goes the honor of having the oldest functioning organization of its kind in the world. There was also a Women's String Orchestra in New York at about the same time but the next ones of symphonic stature were, in the order of their inception, Philadelphia in 1921, and Chicago in 1925. Since 1930 a dozen or more have sprung up from coast to coast, some being string ensembles, but several maintaining symphonic standards from their inception.

The limited size and repertoire of the early women's orchestras left little tradition to be carried on to future generations. This, coupled with the fact that, even until quite recently, a woman playing anything besides a violin, piano or harp was looked upon as somewhat of a freak, makes us realize that some sort of step was necessary to correct the situation. With the present-day educational system providing opportunity for the early study of orchestral instruments, and the playing of wind instruments becoming as popular (if not more so) than strings, the women's orchestras are providing an excellent clearing-house for talent, a chance to try their "wings" at orchestral "flying," and, incidentally, to familiarize themselves with the great orchestral repertoire, and imbibe some of the traditions. Some who have proved to be outstanding, to be real orchestra "men," have already been taken into major orchestras. To these women falls the responsibility of proving that efficiency, promptness, practicability and physical fitness are as much a part of a woman's qualifications as they are of man's. Aspiring young American women should be very proud and greatly encouraged over the fact that Mr. Stokowski has included eighteen women musicians in his newly organized "National Youth Orchestra."

With the increase in opportunity along orchestral lines, comes, quite naturally, the ambition to conduct, and no doubt the future will present many examples of feminine leadership. At present, however, approximately one-half of the women's orchestras on record have male conductors. This is easily accounted for, since formerly there was very little chance for a woman to demonstrate her qualities of leadership, and few women had the necessary background for symphonic conducting. The old adage "conductors are born and not made," may be very true, but after all, the knowledge of scores and music in general, familiarity with instruments, and the technic of expressing ideas without the aid of an instrument, comes only with years of routine and experience.

Granted that all these have been accomplished, the question might be raised—"What has woman to offer, can she contribute anything to the art of conducting, and what might her handicaps be?"

First of all, if a woman is able to conquer the prejudices to which we have alluded (and these are even greater against woman conductors than they are against any other woman musician) to the extent that she has been given an opportunity to conduct, one can expect to find an individuality of conception which is in itself a contribution to the art. Aside from this, there is a possibility that grace of body, delicacy of taste, and super-sensitivity might be attributes of the ideal woman conductor, and add to the aesthetic quality of the music. Psychologically, she may be handicapped until she has proved by tactful discipline that she is master of the situation. After that she should have no difficulty in securing the confidence and respect of both men and women.

As yet, very few women have been put to a severe test, but the fact that several have distinguished themselves in this capacity and "broken the ice," as it were, should prove stimulating to young women seeking a career in this field. Ethel Leginska, who conducted many major orchestras abroad and in this country before spending several years with women's orchestras in Boston, Chicago and New York; Antonio Brico, who has conducted several of the large orchestras in this country as well as organizing her own in New York, and Nadia Boulanger, the French composer, who recently conducted both New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras, are outstanding examples of women's perseverence and triumph over obstacles. Several others are doing excellent work in organizing and training newly formed organizations.

If I may cite my own personal experiences (eight years with the Woman's Symphony Orchestra of Chicago and several guest appearances with all-male orchestras) I would say that while it is a struggle and an up-hill path, certainly it is an accomplishment well worth the effort and the sacrifice for which it calls.

Women in general constitute the greatest part of the audiences which support good music. It is known by those who have experienced the joy of ensemble playing of any kind, that it is far more enjoyable to participate in the making of music than to be even the best kind of a listener. Women's enthusiasm, their devotion to a cause, and their delight in their work creates a quality in their performance that makes for uniqueness of tone and a spiritual quality in their interpretation, which should produce really pleasurable listening. By striving toward the highest standards of musicianship and character, surely the truly gifted and deserving young woman will find her niche in the orchestral world.

The Philadelphia Orchestra

By EUGENE ORMANDY

IT IS never any trouble for me to remember exactly the age of the famous organization of which I have the honor to be Music Director. The little group of enthusiastic citizens who founded the Philadelphia Orchestra was organized in 1900. Just a few months before that date, in Budapest, I first saw the light of day.

There is a special fascination for me in thinking of our careers as parallels —the Orchestra's and mine—until the parallel lines eventually met. Its first struggling years under Fritz Scheel and Carl Pohlig were seasons during which a public had to be established as well as an orchestra. Money was not plentiful for the new venture, which many people thought too "high-brow" for the squandering of such great sums.

At a distance of some 3500 miles, while the Orchestra was acquiring audience and experience, I was learning to walk and talk, to read and to play the violin. I had never heard of the Philadelphia Orchestra, perhaps never of Philadelphia, which was a difficult word for a little Hungarian boy to pronounce. I was intent upon the career of a violin virtuoso. My lessons with the great Jeno Hubay (for whom I was named) filled my days with work and with dreams. My fingers were numb from the exercises of Kreutzer and Paganini, the show-pieces of Vieuxtemps and Sarasate.

I had tasted the intoxicating wine of being a Wunderkind, and my whole ambition was to be a Wundermann as well. Of course the orchestra had always seemed to me to provide the most complete musical experience, as it must for any real musician, and my studies at the Royal Academy had included the orchestral field. But I had not aspired to the position of a Weingartner or a Muck; Ysaye, Joachim and Kreisler were still my idols.

Meantime, in Philadelphia, the Orchestra had acquired a new and vitalizing leader who was to make not only Philadelphia history but orchestral history. In Leopold Stokowski, Philadelphians discovered that they had a unique conductor. The fact stimulated their generosity, and he was able to increase the size of the Orchestra, to range through Europe and America for the finest instrumentalists, regardless of their fees, and to present new and important works. His boundless musical curiosity, his joy in experiment, made those years immensely fruitful. Philadelphia became known as widely for its Orchestra as it had been for its Liberty Bell.

My own progress as a budding virtuoso had been steady. I had become a professor of violin at the Royal Academy when I was only seventeen, but I was still determined on a concert career. Four dreadful years of war had impoverished Europe, however, and music was but a precarious livelihood. The fame and fortune to be won in the United States shone as a bright goal, and at the age of twenty-one I set out, lured by the promises of a too persuasive manager.

My high hopes had blunted my practical senses, for the manager's promises proved empty. I found myself in New York with very little but a violin in my hand, a repertory in my head, and ambition in my heart. Difficult years followed. I had to swallow my pride and be grateful for an obscure position as a violinist in the Capitol Theater, which, before the days of the sound-track, maintained an efficient orchestra of high standards. It seemed a bitter end to my young dreams, but I know now that it was training of the most valuable kind.

It was at the theater that I had my first experience as a conductor. I was asked in a sudden emergency to conduct three movements of the Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphony. The performance went off successfully and people were complimentary. But more important for me was the discovery of a new instrument, richer and more responsive than the violin. The incident changed the course of my life.

Broadcasting was new then, and I was engaged to conduct a number of programs for the radio . . . humble beginnings, perhaps, but the best of training. Audiences and critics approved my work, and I was asked to conduct some of the Stadium Concerts in New York, as well as at the Robin Hood Dell in 1930 when these Philadelphia concerts were inaugurated. Here again, orchestra, audience and the press were most kind in their praises.

In the following season my wandering path and the more exalted one of the Philadelphia Orchestra crossed again, this time during the winter season. I was asked to substitute as guest-conductor for the most eminent of conductors, Arturo Toscanini, who fell ill. The experience was unforgettable. Players were most cooperative and audiences were cordial. It seemed even then like the climax of my career to lead (if only for two weeks) such an aggregation of musicians as the Philadelphia Orchestra, in the place of so distinguished a conductor as Stokowski, and as substitute for the great Toscanini.

The illness of another conductor then took me to the Minneapolis Orchestra, and I became permanent conductor there after my first concert. Permanent, that is, until Philadelphia again called me. Mr. Stokowski, after a quarter of a century, wished to be relieved of some of the heavy responsibility of the long and arduous season with the orchestra he had created. In 1936, I had the honor of being appointed co-conductor with him, and, two years later, as he wished further freedom, of becoming music director. Thus the two careers were united that had started out at the same time—the Orchestra's in Philadelphia, mine in Budapest.

The present crowded schedule of the Philadelphia Orchestra brings work and joy in equal measure. From early October into early May we are busy. The discriminating audience that has been built up in Philadelphia hears twenty-eight Friday and Saturday concerts, ten in a Monday series. There are delightful, informal "Concerts for Youth," at which we cannot accommodate half the eager young people who would like to listen. There are the simpler concerts for children who are taking their first toddling steps in the realm of music. The series of ten concerts in New York evokes a healthy spirit of rivalry.

Over and above these are the concerts on tour, both in mid-season and in the spring. It is an inestimable privilege to be able to bring such music to the smaller cities of the middle west and south, where an orchestra concert is not a weekly occurrence but an event to be looked forward to and back upon for a whole season. The crowded houses, the unrestrained enthusiasm, are heartening to all the artists in the Orchestra as well as to myself.

In these times, when the torch of war is destroying so much of beauty and worth in the old world, it is an especially sacred duty for us in the new world to cherish and protect things of the spirit. I hope that the Philadelphia Orchestra may bend itself to that task for many years to come, and that I, too, may continue to do my share.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra

By VLADIMIR GOLSCHMANN

I WAS invited to Saint Louis in 1930 as guest conductor. Since then I have been the permanent leader of this magnificent organization, the sixtieth birthday of which we celebrated last season.

It is all to the credit of Saint Louis that its orchestra has such a glorious past, but our true reason to be proud is to know that in spite of its age there is none which is younger in spirit, more ardent or more enthusiastic.

As everywhere else the most famous compositions of the past form the basis of our programs, but it is very seldom that we give a concert without introducing a work new to the public. I am happy to say that the names of about fifty American composers have already appeared on my programs; also the scores of all those who represent the contemporary musical trends of Europe.

Every time that I have conducted a new symphonic work I have not pretended that it was a masterpiece. To those of our hearers who are sometimes surprised that conductors do not exclusively offer to the public compositions of an absolutely indisputable excellence I will say: What right have I to play only scores that are familiar to everyone, appreciated by all and so to speak "sure-fire hits?" Who can imagine a lover of books, a true man of letters who in his library would have only a few dozen masterpieces and whose whole life would be devoted to reading and rereading these books alone — a man who would never be interested in new literature because he would not believe in the possibility of discovering new talent?

It is simply incredible to realize how the interest in symphonic music has increased in recent years. Because of this interest our educational responsibility has equally been enhanced. It is fitting that we devote the place of honor to the most famous scores. But what chance will young composers have if we do not help them? We must remember that every time that through the medium of the orchestra we bring to life the dream of a young musician, an unknown of today may prove the genius of tomorrow!

I have mentioned our function as educators; what role could give us greater satisfaction? In saying this I have in mind particularly our student concerts which we have developed into two series: One sponsored by the Board of Education, the other one by the Women's Association of the Symphony. I am thinking also of our popular concerts where we feature programs of the highest character. I am thinking also of our tours. We have visited during the past years about twenty states and everywhere we find an enthusiastic and most comprehending public.

At a time when a great part of the world is living through some of the darkest days in man's history, it is one of our consolations to realize that in this marvelous free country there has never been a more eager search for spiritual values and so much devotion and love for the greatest of all arts, our art, Music.

Debut Orchestras

By JOSEPH BARONE

WHAT has perhaps been the greatest need on the American musical scene is a "debut medium" by which young American artists would be able to bridge the gap that exists between our fine musical institutions and our great symphonic and operatic organizations. For this country can well boast of its splendid music schools like Juilliard, Eastman, Curtis and Chicago Musical College; and needless to say, it can be proud of its Philadelphia Orchestra, its Boston Symphony, its New York Philharmonic and its Metropolitan Opera Company. But ironically enough, while we lead in both fields, there has been no means by which our native artists have been able to prove themselves in order to gain recognition on our own concert stage.

A quick survey of the situation reveals that virtually all our major symphony orchestras and opera companies are conducted by musicians of European background. Likewise, our concert and operatic rosters are still predominated by foreign artists. In most cases, this is as it should be, for these musicians are so unquestionably superior because of their experience, that they well deserve the lofty posts to which they have been assigned.

But what of the young American musician who seeks like recognition? How can he hope to achieve similar fame in the face of such notable competition? True, the Schubert Memorial and the Naumburg Musical Foundation have endeavored to assist several young artists each season in this direction, but the problem of the conductor and composer still remains for consideration.

One organization is a fine example of contribution to the solution of the situation, the Philadelphia Little Symphony. Here is "an American debut orchestra dedicated to creating more opportunities to young American artists"—by providing an excellent accompaniment for outstanding soloists who wish to make their debut in a great music center; by offering guest-conducting experience to rising directors of merit; and by furnishing an available medium for promising composers to hear their works performed by a fine professional orchestra.

The orchestra is a complete symphonic ensemble of chamber proportions, of the same approximate size as the symphonies in the days of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and includes complete strings, woodwinds, brass and percussion sections. Being composed, as it is, of twenty-eight of the finest musicians in the Philadelphia orchestra, it well merits such praise as has been showered by the press.

Organized in June, 1939, it has received the overwhelming support and endorsement of outstanding musical personalities from coast to coast. Listing Harl McDonald, Madame Olga Samaroff Stokowski and Deems Taylor as Honorary Directors, and Eugene Ormandy and Leopold Stokowski as Honorary Advisers, it also maintains two boards by which to facilitate its selection of the young artists to be presented. The local Advisory Board includes the heads of all Philadelphia musical institutions and concert organizations, such as Horace Alwyne of Bryn Mawr College, James Francis Cooke of "Etude," Frederick E. Hahn of Zeckwer-Hahn Musical Academy, Sylvan Levin of the Philadelphia Opera Company, Guy Marriner of the Franklin Institute and University of Pennsylvania, Konrad Neuger of the Metropolitan Opera and Bryn Mawr Conservatory, Paul Nordoff of the Philadelphia Conservatory, Charles O'Connell of RCA Manufacturing Company, Thaddeus Rich of Temple University, Ben Stad of the American Society of Ancient Instruments, and Randall Thompson of the Curtis Institute.

The Honorary National Board includes Walter Damrosch, Rudolph Ganz, Vladimir Golschmann, Eugene Goosens, Howard Hanson, Ernest Hutcheson, Pierre Monteux, Fritz Reiner, Arthur Rodzinski, Fabian Sevitzky and Nikolai Sokoloff.

Two concerts were given during the first season, in the Academy of Music, presenting two guest-conductors, two singers, a pianist, a violinist, a cellist, and works of four young composers. Proving the orchestra's usefulness in bridging our fine musical institutions with our concert and operatic organizations, most of these young artists were catapulted into the recognition they sought. One singer was signed for further appearances at the Chautauqua and Worchester Festivals; another won an appearance with the Philadelphia Orchestra; a conductor was appointed a director of a Philadelphia opera company; the pianist received a number of concert engagements; and the 'cellist played with several other orchestras, including an appearance on Deems Taylor's "Musical Americana" program.

The orchestra is unique in its aims, being designed purely and simply as a non-profit musical institution to create "debut opportunities" for young artists anxious to prove themselves in a large music center. Candidates wishing to make an appearance with the Philadelphia Little Symphony are asked to communicate with Joseph Barone, Bryn Mawr, Penn. Applications must be accompanied by a letter of recommendation from a teacher, an eminent musician, or a school of music. All applicants are given auditions, and from these, the outstanding ones are asked to appear before the Advisory Board.

There are other movements in America which are contributing their efforts to providing further debut mediums. However, more are needed. Perhaps the success of the Philadelphia Little Symphony will encourage the development of similar organizations in other music centers.

Compositions for Radio

By DAVIDSON TAYLOR*

EVERY once in a while we come across a story or review of a music event that states, in effect: "Such-and-such received its first public performance, although it has been played on the radio," or "This was the symphony's first performance; it has only been played once on the radio."

Without wishing to labor an obvious point, it is interesting to observe that a world premiere in Carnegie Hall, if played to standing room, would be heard by some 3,000 persons. If the work were part of a New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra program broadcast over the Columbia network of a Sunday afternoon it would have a radio audience of an additional ten million persons, as estimated.

The question of who played what first, where and when is becoming increasingly difficult to answer. Establishment of the authenticity of a "first," in consideration of the great quantity of music being written today and the countless organizations here and abroad promulgating it, should be secondary to the ideal of making the best available to the largest number in the widest possible area.

There has been a growing feeling among us at the Columbia Broadcasting System that an unjustified importance is attached to so-called "firsts," except for their interests to scholars and historians. This does not mean that we would take no pride in introducing a composition fresh from the pen of a modern master. The Eighth Symphony of Sibelius, for example, long awaited by music-lovers, would honor the organization disclosing it to the world.

Radio has assisted in calling into being a considerable number of major compositions. Radio has at least one method of assuring world premieres: the commission. Commissioned music is music written to order. Besides giving the patron the privilege of performing the new composition first, this practice places at the modern composer's disposal the facilities of a radio network to use as he wishes.

Commissions issued by Columbia to important American musicians have produced three operas, some dozen works in the larger orchestral forms and a considerable number of smaller pieces, including a series making use of American folk-themes.

In 1937, CBS established the Columbia Composers Commission. Six distinguished American musicians were invited to write original music for radio, experimenting freely with the newly-developed resources of the medium. For the concert hall approach they were to substitute a studio approach and attempt to utilize to the fullest the acoustical knowledge of the engineers and producers.

The composers were William Grant Still, Walter Piston, Aaron Copland, Roy Harris, Howard Hanson and Louis Gruenberg. No rules were dictated except that the works were to be between eight and forty minutes long, and were to be scored for an orchestra not exceeding certain proportions. Gruenberg wrote an opera, Green Mansions, to his own libretto based on the Hudson novel.

Still wrote Lenox Avenue, for orchestra and chorus with narrator, a descriptive poem. Piston supplied a Concertino for Piano and Orchestra.

A work simply titled Music for Radio, to which the composer later added the sub-title A Saga of the Prairie, suggested by a listener, was Copland's contribution. Howard Hanson gave CBS the first three movements of his Third Symphony, which was all he had completed at the time. He added a final movement a year or so later.

The piece Roy Harris turned in was appropriately called Time Suite, the playing time of whose movements corresponded respectively to their numerical order, thus: first movement, one minute; second, two minutes, etc.

All the compositions were given their first performance by Howard Barlow conducting the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. The success of the venture resulted in a second commission for the following year, when five other composers were named to write orchestral music and a sixth an opera. Vittorio Giannini received the opera commission and Robert A. Simon was engaged as librettist. They wrote Beauty and the Beast, based on the classic fairy tale.

Orchestral composers and their compositions were Robert Russell Bennett, Eight Etudes for Orchestra; Leo Sowerby, Theme in Yellow; Quincy Porter, Two Dances for Radio; Jerome Moross, Tall Story; R. Nathaniel Dett, American Sampler. All these were introduced, again under Barlow's direction in the summer of 1938.

In the same series Barlow played works of promise submitted at his request by Americans in that vast nameless group that seeks fruitlessly for public hearing. Some of these had achieved some public success; most of them were practically unknown generally. Barlow invited such composers to send in their manuscripts and played those that showed merit. Some of the composers chosen have since won significant successes. Among them are Paul Creston, William Schuman, Julia Smith and others.

In 1939, Giannini was commissioned to do another opera. With Philip Ansel Roll as librettist he produced Blennerhassett, a romantic musical setting of an episode relating to the Burr conspiracy at Blennerhassett Island in the Ohio River. Like Beauty and the Beast, it had its premiere as a "Columbia Workshop" presentation, on November 2, 1939, Barlow again conducting.

During the 1939-40 season of Columbia's American School of the Air, a new composition each week, commissioned from a different composer of this country, was played in a cycle called Folk-Music of America. All compositions took as their basic themes one or more of the folk-songs collected by Alan Lomax of the Library of Congress. These were not merely arrangements of familiar native melodies. The folk-tune merely supplied the motif and the composition was an independent work.

I think writing music for radio is enormously important. In 1939 I made a survey of this practice throughout the world, and it was obvious that the American broadcasting networks have been more active in sponsoring composition than the radio authorities of most other nations.

Among twenty-six countries questioned by the Union Internationale de Radiodiffusion of Geneva on music composed for broadcasting, Germany alone stated that commissioned works had turned out to be unsatisfactory. Italy made its most ambitious experiment during 1932 when it conducted a competition for "radiogenic" music. Similar contests were sponsored by Spain, Latvia, Sweden and Holland. The BBC in England has commissioned works from such leading composers as Elgar, Bantock, Holst, Walton and Bliss.

Among the Soviet composers, Prokofieff wrote several works on commission from the State Radio at Moscow. I do not have much detail about French compositions that have a radio origin. However, Mr. Stan Golestan, who was writing for "Le Figaro" in Paris, sent me a long list of such titles.

The Polish Radio in Warsaw for several years had been commissioning composers to write for it. By 1935 Belgium, Hungary, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia had ordered music written for radio, most of them with satisfactory results. Before the outbreak of war Palestine, Australia, Bulgaria, Danzig, India, Eire and Rumania had been active in this field also. Perhaps in twenty years it will be possible to assemble full data on the subject, and it will then be seen how important radio has been in the production of new music.

NBC's Contribution to Music

By ERNEST LA PRADE*

WHEN the National Broadcasting Company was organized, in 1926, its founders stated that its policy would be to present "the best programs available for broadcasting in the United States." To indicate how that policy would be applied with respect to music, they planned, for the inaugural network broadcast on November 15th, a program designed as a forecast of the range and quality of music which they proposed to make available to the public. The artists and organizations that participated in this broadcast were Mary Garden, Titta Ruffo, the New York Symphony Orchestra, Harold Bauer, the NBC Light Opera Company, the Goldman Band, the New York Oratorio Society and the dance orchestras of George Olsen, Ben Bernie, B. A. Rolfe and Vincent Lopez.

But even this broad panorama failed to give a complete picture of what network broadcasting had in store for music lovers. It lacked several items which later became indispensable elements of the NBC program structure. It lacked, for example, chamber music, folk music, educational programs and international broadcasts from the music centers of Europe. The forecast was an understatement, as subsequent events soon demonstrated.

In 1927 grand opera was added to the list of network features, beginning on January 21st with a performance of "Faust" by the Chicago Civic Opera Company. This was the first of a series of weekly broadcasts which continued for five seasons. The Boston Symphony Orchestra also made its radio debut over NBC networks in 1927, and concerts by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra were also broadcast. Other items included 93 chamber music programs, weekly broadcasts by the NBC staff orchestra of fifty players, occasional oratories and cantatas, studio presentations of grand and light operas, and numerous programs of light concert music. Popular dance music was, of course, abundantly represented.

1928 brought further additions, including the NBC Music Appreciation Hour, first network educational program for schools; weekly symphony concerts sponsored by the General Electric Company, and 120 programs by the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps bands and the Goldman Band.

In 1929 NBC presented the first broadcasts by Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, the first broadcasts of Puccini operas in America, the first international rebroadcasts of programs from Europe, concerts by the Rochester, Detroit, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles orchestras, weekly performances of choral masterpieces by the National Oratorio Society, and the first of the Standard School Broadcasts and Standard Symphony Concerts on the Pacific Coast.

A detailed account of NBC's musical progress during these and ensuing years would be impressive but is neither practical nor necessary for the present purpose, which will be adequately served by listing a few items significant of the general trend:

1931—Inauguration of broadcasts from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House.
—First rebroadcasts of opera from Covent Garden and Salzburg.
—First awards offered to American composers for symphonic works written for broadcasting.

1932—First performance of an opera written for broadcasting ("The Willow Tree" by Charles Wakefield Cadman).

1933—First series of weekly two-hour broadcasts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.
—First rebroadcast of a concert from Bayreuth (Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Richard Strauss conducting).
—First rebroadcast of musical programs from Russia.

1934—Inauguration of NBC Music Guild to present chamber music four times weekly.
—Series of broadcasts by Southern folk musicians, with commentaries by John Powell.

1935—Awards offered to American composers for chamber music written for broadcasting.

1936—First rebroadcast of opera from Glyndebourn, England.

1937—First series of broadcasts from the Cincinnati May Music Festival.
—First broadcasts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival (Boston Symphony Orchestra).
—Organization of NBC Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

At this point a brief statistical comparison may be of interest. The following table shows the quantitative growth of NBC music programs during the first decade of the company's network operation:

	1927	1936
Symphony concerts	56	420
Grand opera broadcasts	26	34
Choral programs	21	243
Chamber music programs	93	297
Serious music programs from foreign countries	—	70

The chief value of network broadcasting to music and the musical public is, without doubt, its ability to bring the two together without restrictions of time or space. However, broadcasting has not been content to serve merely as a means of transmission. The National Broadcasting Company has consistently sought to further the development of the musical art, as well as the public interest, in various constructive ways. In the beginning it foresaw an urgent demand for listener guidance from the millions of laymen to whom fine music had suddenly become accessible. That demand it proceeded to supply with the Damrosch and other music appreciation programs. It saw an opportunity to stimulate the efforts of native composers, and possibly to evolve new styles and forms of composition, through awards and commissions for music written specifically for broadcasting. The first project of this kind was launched in 1931, when the NBC Orchestral Awards, totalling $10,000, were offered. It resulted in the creation of five new works which, judging by the number of performances they have had by leading orchestras, constitute an important addition to American symphonic literature. Of the five composers of these works only one, it is interesting to note, had a previously established reputation.

Other contests have been held, such as the NBC Music Guild Awards for chamber compositions, and commissions have been granted to promising composers, such as the gifted and youthful Gian-Carlo Menotti, whose radio opera "The Old Maid and the Thief" was produced by NBC in 1939. Many scores have also been written on commission to accompany dramatic programs.

A by-product of broadcasting which seems destined to influence future trends of music in various ways is the development of electronic musical instruments, some of which afford entirely new tone colors. NBC has experimented extensively in their use, presenting during the past year a number of broadcasts by an orchestra composed exclusively of electronic instruments in order to demonstrate their capacities and encourage the writing of music to exploit their special qualities.

It may be superfluous to refer here to the contribution which NBC made to music through the founding of its own permanent symphony orchestra and the engagement of Arturo Toscanini to conduct it, but that contribution made possible another of far-reaching significance which calls for comment. When Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra were sent to South America in the summer of 1940 they were serving not only music but the cause of human amity. Knowing the eloquence of Toscanini in the international language, one needs little assurance of the success of his mission.

As originally formulated, the policy of the National Broadcasting Company was to present the best available programs. In practice, NBC has gone farther. It has not only presented the best programs it could find ready to hand but has constantly labored to provide still better ones — to discover new talent, new music, new forms of presentation, and to make possible even finer and more inspired performances than the finest previously available. It feels that it has some worthy accomplishments to its credit, but it has little time to contemplate them. It is too busy planning its contributions to the music of the future.

Wagnerian Opera

By LAURITZ MELCHIOR

SO MUCH has been written about Richard Wagner and his operas, that instead of clearly defining the issue, it has served only to make the confusion greater. With so much fanfare about what a person should know before listening to a Wagnerian opera, the ordinary theatregoer often is kept from attending the opera because he imagines he would be unable to enjoy it.

It is true that the Wagnerian operas, especially the Ring, have their motives, and it is very important for the listener to know what these motives are. But it is up to the artist to make himself a true interpreter of the Wagnerian work — not flying up in the air, but resting with both feet upon the ground.

The singer must know not only every word of his role, but every note of music being played in the orchestra pit during the opera, whether he is singing or not, whether he is on the stage or not. In actually thinking with the orchestra, the artist who sings Wagner has enough help in the dramatic building up of his parts. In that way, the Wagnerian operas are different from all others, and must be treated by the artist differently from all others. That is the so-called Wagnerian style, and without that, Wagnerian opera will lose very much of its power and life.

The original school of the Wagnerian style was Bayreuth. I am, I believe, the last Wagnerian singer who had the privilege of working with Cosima Wagner and Siegfried Wagner. I think it might be of interest to know a little of how a young artist takes his first steps in the Wagner music dramas, and what I learned during my nine years work at the Bayreuth Festivals.

In the summer of 1923, I came to Bayreuth to study for the first time. Before that I had been working in Munich with Anna Bahr-Mildenburg, who was famous before the war as the Bayreuth "Isolde." She had recommended me to Siegfried Wagner, and he engaged me to sing the roles of "Parsifal" and "Siegmund" in Die Walkuere for the Festivals in 1924. I was a beginner in the German language at that time, and I still have a lot to learn in that language.

On my arrival in Bayreuth, I was asked to come to Wahnfried, the old home of Richard Wagner, where Frau Cosima and her son, Siegfried, lived. With quaking knees, I sang to her — I still remember she sat up on the balcony in the big hall, and was all dressed in white like a goddess. When I was through, she bowed her head and disappeared. After a while, Siegfried came and told me that his mother had approved of my engagement, and thought me talented. I am happy to say that this, my first season was a success, and I still have in my possession a photograph of Siegfried Wagner dedicated to me.

The work then started for me, and I spent about three to five hours a day with Mr. Karl Kittel, the world famous coach from Bayreuth. We started with Walkuere. First Mr. Kittel read the whole part through with me, to give me a picture of the character of the person I had to portray, and his relationship to the other figures in the opera. To be a true Wagnerian singer, the first rule is to follow absolutely the advice the master himself has given. (Much of this is printed in the piano scores), and not try to make Wagner better — that is impossible! In Bayreuth, more of the original advice and remarks from the master were kept and recorded during the years in which he himself was directing the rehearsals. In order never to forget these, I kept a little book. In the book I wrote all these remarks, and as I came along in the study of the part, I marked them with a number in the score. Each time I went to see the intentions and remarks of the Maestro, I checked up that number in my book. There is no composer in the world who has made his orchestra go so hand-in-hand with the dramatic action on the stage as Wagner since he not only wrote the music but the words as well. As a matter of fact, as the orchestra thinks, the singer thinks and acts the thought. That is not so in the Italian opera or any other operas. There, it is only the musical background for the dramatic situation on the stage. In Wagner, it is necessary to do the exact things in the exact moment, and not just as the artist feels inclined. When he knows that, it is, of course, a great help to him to fit the situation with his personality.

The necessity of absolutely following the advice of Wagner's orchestra cannot be overemphasized. When the artist knows his Wagnerian tradition, a blind listener who cannot follow the acting on the stage can, through his ears and the great power of concentration given him by the fact that the eye cannot distract him from the music, actually see the whole dramatic situation. The power of that Wagnerian tradition is that you, in the right moment, with the right gesture, together with the right undercurrent of music, give your art Life and Soul. Singing is a sort of painting. I will say operatic singing is like an oil painting where you must paint with a great brush and look at the painting from a distance. With a song it is more like a water-color painting, for every little detail put there cannot be taken away, and you can look upon it closely.

I am sure that if the artist follows closely his acting and expression with the orchestra, and has a personality of his own, he will give anybody — with sight, or blind, whether understanding the language or not — the full value of a Wagnerian opera.

The reader may wonder that I mention the blind as an example. That is because I myself, have felt opera from both standpoints, the standpoint of the seeing, and the standpoint of the blind. When I was a boy, I accompanied my blind sister to the opera. Down in the cellar, next to the prompter's box there were two — shall we call them holes — they were called loges, but they were not more than holes — where the blind from the Royal School for the Blind were allowed to sit every evening without charge, and listen to the opera. We, therefore, were forced to listen and feel the art coming to us just as the blind would feel. Of course, I did not feel it with the same quality of absorption of the artist's voice, with his soul back of it, as the blind did. But I felt how important it is for the artist on the stage never to lose tension or the character of his part because you seem to feel it and miss something. I think the power of the voice is enormous. I find every singer who has the gift of voice possesses a Divine touch, and, it is not enough that he sing his parts. He must give them Soul and Blood. In the Wagnerian operas that is more difficult than in other operas because Wagner's characters are mostly gods — and how can a human being be a god? As he cannot be or act that, he should be a true instrument of tradition. The artist should follow every guidance he can get from Wagner's instructions and remarks, and every color he can find in his orchestra to help give a background to his feelings.

No artist can make Wagner better. But he can, through working seriously with all the given material, and with personality, lift the opera to the greatest possible heights. His art, together with the great music, is capable of making the audience, even those not familiar with Wagner before coming to the opera house, full of beautiful thoughts, love of music, life and humanity.

A Drama Critic Looks At Opera

By D. FRANK MARCUS

SITTING where I'm sitting, from the vantage or disadvantage point of a drama critic, you may or may not agree with my observations concerning the art of Thespis, as applicable to the stage of grand opera.

With no wish to take anything away from the vocal talents displayed by numerous singers on the past and current rosters of operatic interpreters, and with due respect for the monumental tradition which many great singers have left behind, it is nevertheless, my opinion, formed as an opera attendant since youth, that only a pair and a half of hands would be needed to count those singers who might logically be classified as credible operatic actors. Indeed, in the final check-up, the counter might have a finger or two left over.

Limiting my critique to this side of the pond, I vouch that ever since "Tannhauser" had its American premiere as the first of the Wagnerian operas to be heard in this country, Wagner on earth and Wagner out of his grave has demanded acting. "The Ring" has fairly cried for it; "Lohengrin" has pleaded for it; while Parsifal, the great resister of all temptations has, notwithstanding, become weakened in his need for it.

The contemporary Mr. Melchior voices the Wagnerian heroes to the rafters and into the hearts of his audiences. Numerous other present-day Wagnerian tenors, as well as those before Melchior's time, have also merited accolades for their vocal efforts. Nevertheless, from the Siegmund and the Siegfried of "The Ring" to the Prize Singer of the "Meistersingers," here in America, "the Great Richard's" heroes are, at this very moment, awaiting more noteworthy miming interpretations. Beyond this, they ask for that something which might be termed stature—the figure of, let us say, a Leo Slezak, who may not have been the greatest Wagnerian tenor of his day but could and did penetrate and play a role with a high degree of understanding of its psychological implications.

Because most of the music dramas of Richard Wagner are mystical in the forms of their librettos, their music and their scenic investitures, plus the fact that their truly heroic proportions are needful of reactions which can only be secured via credibility, from my point of view, it might be well to scatter their performances as pure operas to the four winds, preserving instead their integrities on the concert platform. In that way, the music of "Tristan" which is einzig, might still be sung for you, and me, and others to enjoy without inflicting upon us the need for watching action which is a mere burlesque of that which is actually called for.

Considering the foregoing, the reader might come to some definite conclusion as to where the writer stands, relative to the ample avoirdupois of the average Wagnerian prima donna. You might doubtless gather that I believe she should be heard. In truth, I believe she should even be seen when she opens her mouth to vocalize a "Dich, teure Halle" or a "Ho-yo-to-ho." But let her be both seen and heard, I say, on a concert stage where she can be free from the throes of those agonies imposed upon her by the necessities of displaying the histrionic ability which she does not possess.

To be honest with me, have you ever watched a dramatic soprano give voice to Brunnhilde's "Battle Cry"? Are not the antics which her mouth has to be put through sufficiently trying to watch, without asking for more in the way of miming?

Should you pin me down to plauditing the acting of those interpreters of Wagner, whom I have seen and heard, my brief list might surprise you. I would bring back Clarence Whitehill to your mind. I would remind you of Albert Reiss, the only effective simulator of David I have ever watched and, should you go further and question me regarding immediate contemporaries, I would give you Friedrich Schorr and Marjorie Lawrence. Definitely, Schorr's Hans Sachs still remains something not only to hear but see, while Miss Lawrence's Wagnerian simulations, as well as her ventures in the operas of Richard Strauss, are also unusually meritorious interpretive efforts.

In an article of affirmation and negation, such as this, one should not stop with the weightier works of Wagner, when even the farcical libretto substances of such Mozartian wares as "Le Donne Curiose" and "Le Nozze di Figaro" shriek for credible expression.

What of Verdi? Other than Martinelli and Gigli, how many contemporary singing actors have we who can breathe real life into the role of Radames? Have you recently seen a younger Germont who looked anything like the type of wooer with whom a dying Violetta would like to spend her last months? And, when one goes on to the romantically implicated scores of Puccini, need one do more than mention the subtle acting demands of the role of Pinkerton in "Madame Butterfly"?

With Antonio Scotti's resignation from the Metropolitan, and his untimely death a short time thereafter, the world of opera lost one of the greatest of its acting singers. The insidious Scarpia of "Tosca," the carefree Marcello of "La Boheme" and the Sharpless of "Madame Butterfly" were stripped of the most reliable acting interpreter they ever had. There is, however, more than a spark of hope in the thought that the void left by Scotti may soon be gapped. Mr. John Brownlee, for example, did a mighty fine acting job as Scarpia and in other baritone roles during the Metropolitan's 1939-40 season. There is every reason to believe that Mr. John Brownlee's stature as an actor may grow even beyond these past exemplary accomplishments. Music critics have already sung ample praises for his vocal contributions on the Metropolitan's rostrum. Thus, it might even be possible to return such an action-demanding one act opera as Leone's "L'Oracolo" to the repertoire, not only because of Mr. Brownlee's ability but also because the adequate Mr. Tibbett, and the equally satisfactory John Charles Thomas are available as well.

While on the subject of baritones one should not fail to praisefully reward the beloved Giuseppe De Luca, who last season returned to the New York scene. Not only are his Rigoletto, Tonio and Figaro finely etched characterizations but he scores, likewise, in every other part assigned to him.

Turning to the contemporary opera scene involving the distaff artists, the histrionic promise displayed by the charming Jarmela Novotna in her first season on New York's great opera stage suggests welcome and needed reinforcement. I wish I could shout paeans for numerous other feminine members of today's opera ranks, where acting is concerned. That being impossible, from my point of view, I recall with delight some operatic stars of other years. I remember the elfin charm of Lucrezia Bori, that great champion of the Metropolitan's cause, in lyric and coloratura roles, and the fervor of Claudia Muzio in parts requiring dramatic fire.

Regardless of what omissions I may make, I should include an estimation of the statuesque Mary Garden. She was at once a Melisande and a Thais whose credibilities other sopranos have attempted but failed to equal. As for Jeritza, she was a beautiful woman. She held her audiences via the medium of her glamor, rather than any especially notable dramatic talent. As a matter of fact, Jeritza used to restlessly parade both Floria Tosca and Princess Turandot all over the stage.

I have often asked myself questions about the histrionic talents of Geraldine Farrar — the dove-tailing of voice and action which brought to this once great Metropolitan favorite the tremendous following of a special group known as the Gerry Flappers. Her Carmen, her Butterfly, her Zaza and her Elizabeth, I have since concluded, were not great masterpieces of the miming art. Her's was a case of great personality. Would, at that, that something approaching such personality were in evidence on today's operatic stages.

Some reference should be made to Enrico Caruso—suffice to say that even the late golden tenor's best friends would tell you he never was a sincere son of Thespis. He enjoyed the thrills he got out of clowning and reveled in his ability to get away with breaking up a scene or teasing a prima donna. In his day, he was another of the "personality" members of the Metropolitan's ranks.

In a brief word, returning to the contemporary scene, I point out Ezio Pinza as the finest actor on the Metropolitan's current roster. I bow to the acted-out Mephistopheles of the veteran Leon Rothier as, in the past, I succumbed to the spell of Chaliapin in the same role and in the role of Boris Godounoff.

Nevertheless, in my ultimate conclusion I submit that the grand opera stage today needs singing actors as it has never needed them before, if the interest of the many musically-inclined opera attendants, who have a strong leaning toward credible action, is to be maintained.

Why in heaven's name is it that aspiring opera singers of both sexes fail to include, or take as much time to study dramatics, as they do in improving voice? Why do stage directors limit themselves to the traditional, old-fashioned, curtailed directions covering movement? Why is it that scenic investiture is the matter of paramount interest to most opera stage directors, and how can they tolerate most of the goings-on on the stages lit, sung and acted on under their supervision? All in all, my belief is that the great opera companies might well call upon the services of legitimate dramatic directors, stemming from Broadway or Hollywood, to put the would-be Siegfrieds on their feet and keep the would-be Brunnhildes from putting cold water on Wotan's pyre.

Perhaps the stultifying acting requirements of "Cavalleria Rusticana" are not commensurate with those of such dramatically-playable operas as "La Juive," "Samson et Dalila," or "L'Amore Dei Tre Re." In fact, it may well be, after all this pother and dither, that there are certain standard operas asking, in a histrionic sense, the impossible of their projectors, because they are as out-dated as an early Congreve comedy of manners.

It may, likewise, be that a student of dramatic acting should check his search for its exposition along with his hat and coat, whenever he enters the portals of an opera house. If such is actually the case, why should not the powers of grand opera take the old war horses out of the regular repertoire, preserving and reserving their performances only for the concert platform?

Practical Points for New Composers

By MATHILDE BILBRO

PLEASE let it be remembered that this article is not intended for the professional composer, but for the writer who, though possessing talent, is lacking in experience in the field of musical composition and is attempting to enter professional ranks.

Here then are some suggestions concerning preparation of manuscripts for submission to publishers.

Let us imagine a scene in the editorial department of a standard music publishing house. We are in the office of the chief critic where many manuscripts are awaiting attention. Mr. Critic attempts to uncurl a manuscript which has arrived tightly rolled. The manuscript promptly curls up again and rolls off the music rack. "Take it away," says the busy critic, who has no time for trivialties such as uncurling rolled manuscripts. Outside of this he knows that experienced writers do not roll their manuscripts, and he is interested in experienced writers. Note: Send your mss. in a flat package; or folded only once and protected by a thin cardboard. Good or bad it will then receive careful attention.

The next manuscript to be examined may be a model of neatness, and at first glance may appear attractive. But—throughout, the altered chords are misspelled; F sharps which should be G flats; E flats for D sharps; empty chords; thick, muddy chords; false progressions, etc. The manuscript may bristle with these and other errors, all going to show that the writer has not a practical knowledge of harmony. Note: The really successful composer knows his harmony; knows how to apply this knowledge to his own creative work. He knows that the mere routine of writing figured basses in a class-room is not enough. He makes a strong study of keyboard harmony. He pours over classic and standard compositions for good form.

Another fault is over-orchestration, or too much setting,—a melody which might be lovely with proper treatment, but which is drowned in a preponderance of heavy chords, or lost in a labyrinth of sometimes meaningless cadenzas. The melody may be enriched by a discriminative use of ornamental passages, but such devices used too freely will cheapen the whole effect. Note: Strain your thick chords, and cut some of the ornaments, or vague digressions. Preserve a clear motif, remembering that melody is the vital spark, the soul of music.

While the works of the old masters were extensive both in length and in mental grasp, we must remember that times change. Conditions of the present day call for a variance from the old forms in length and stylistic quality. A good sonata of today is an educational achievement, but in a business way this sonata may prove a problem child. Lengthy preamble in introduction, and long-drawn-out codas were fitting and acceptable in their period, but that period is not today. Likewise with numerous variations; certain classic or established variations make splendid practice or concert work; but we had better play them than write them.

Do not submit to a publisher of music an incomplete manuscript. Frequently a manuscript is received which is entirely devoid of any indication of expression; no tempo; no dynamics; nothing to show the writer's interpretation of his own work. A measure may even be omitted, or the bass left blank with a marginal note saying, "Haven't fully decided just how to write this. Can you make a suggestion?" Note: The musical editor is not supposed to fill in gaps. His province is to review and prepare for the engravers a finished product. The shaping of his raw material is the composer's work. It is expected of the writer to express his intention clearly, and to complete every minor detail before submitting the composition for criticism.

Next comes the matter of faulty alignment. How often has an editor been irritated by reading a manuscript in which there is scarcely a measure where the notation is in proper alignment. Notes in Treble and Bass on corresponding beats should lie exactly in line with each other. But do they?—All too often in manuscripts of inexperienced writers a note on the first beat in Treble may be in line with a note on second beat in Bass, and the other notes correspondingly out of true line. To the novice this may seem a small matter. He may say, "Why I thought anyone ought to know how I meant the notes to fall together!" But to the critic a carelessly or ignorantly constructed manuscript is not interesting, but annoying. Remember he rates your ability level not by what you meant, but by what he sees in black and white. What you have in your mind is not of value to the musical world until it is properly set forth in concrete form. It is for the writer to do this, not the editor. Note: Do not send a careless, slipshod manuscript to a standard publisher. Be accurate in every detail.

Now see Mr. Critic frown! He is examining that nightmare of nightmares, —a too closely crowded manuscript. This is inexcusable. Paper is cheap, and eyesight is precious. Such a manuscript—whatever its merit—does not make a pleasant first impression; and sometimes first impressions are of value. Note: A crowded manuscript is hard on the eyes. Do not stint paper. Space widely and write clearly. Skip staves when margin is needed. If your manuscript is accepted the editor can make all necessary adjustment as to measuring the printed page. It is for the writer to present a legible manuscript which is comfortably read at first sight.

It is unwise to send out mss. at random, regardless of whether your composition may be in line with the catalog of the publisher to whom it is sent. Sometimes it is well to write in advance and inquire whether the publisher is in the market for the particular type of work which you have in hand. Note: Study catalogs, and notice the general trend of each publisher.

In a first effort to interest a publisher it is better to send a small collection than only one manuscript. Remember, your name is new to the publisher. If he receives only one composition he has no way of knowing whether or not this may be only an impulsive effort which may never be followed by any other work. But in case of a collection of several numbers the editor realizes that you are writing seriously. Even if this set is not what he needs, if the work has merit he keeps your name in mind and will be on the lookout for something else from your pen. Note: Never be discouraged by a few rejections. Submit several compositions, rather than one.

And now as to form: With the great wealth of recognized scales, chords and alterations at our disposal, and with a thorough understanding of this material, it would seem that we might be able to satisfy our own creative urge, and to be convincing to the world of music. But it sometimes happens that we are not satisfied with fixed standards, and are fired with inspiration for delving into the region of new and strange chords and weird effects. We are striving for something new. Just here it is well to reflect that the path of the pioneer is not an easy one, and that "something newer is not always something better." Although personally I have always held to recognized forms, I take off my hat to the pioneer,—to the adventurous spirit which has led the science of music to its present high plane. Beethoven was a pioneer. Note: The new composer who wishes to gain quickly an established footing is very wise to adhere to accepted forms.

From the point of view of the worried virtuoso there are too many musicians. From the point of view of culture there are never enough so long as human beings possess a talent which is undeveloped. If all the music schools succeed in reaching all the available talent, we shall eventually take music entirely out of the economic field and begin to consider it as a form of expression essential to a sane and complete spiritual life, a social force binding the community together, and one community to another, more closely than any other language at our command.—Dr. John Erskine.

THE FIVE-FOOT SHELF OF RECORDED MUSICAL MASTERPIECES

THE FIVE FOOT SHELF OF RECORDED MUSICAL MASTERPIECES

PREFACE

THE FOLLOWING LIST OF RECORDS IS RECOMMENDED TO THOSE INTERESTED IN ESTABLISHING A PERSONAL LIBRARY OF RECORDED MUSIC COVERING VARIOUS TYPES AND PERIODS, BUT NOT TOO SPECIALIZED IN NATURE.

A WELL-ROUNDED SELECTION HAS BEEN MADE WHICH IS INTENDED TO SERVE AS A NUCLEUS FOR FURTHER ADDITIONS AND EXPANSIONS, ACCORDING TO THE TASTE AND PREFERENCES OF THE INDIVIDUAL. DISCS HAVE BEEN CHOSEN WITH THE IMPORTANCE OF THE MUSIC, THE QUALITY OF THE PERFORMANCE AND RECORDING, WELL IN MIND. THE STRUCTURE OF THE FIVE FOOT SHELF IS SUCH THAT IT CONTAINS, IN SPITE OF ITS CONCISENESS, ILLUSTRATIONS OF ALL ESSENTIAL BRANCHES AND FORMS OF MUSIC. THUS, THE SELECTIONS OFFERED FORM A GROUNDWORK TO WHICH CAN BE ADDED OTHER RECORDINGS IN ANY OF THOSE BRANCHES WHICH INDIVIDUAL TASTE MAY DICTATE A PREFERENCE TO EMPHASIZE.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT IS DUE TO THE FOLLOWING INDIVIDUALS AND ORGANIZATIONS FOR THEIR KIND COOPERATION IN COMPILING AND COMPLETING THIS SECTION:—AUGUSTANA CHOIR, JOHN BARBIROLLI, HANS BARTH, BARTLETT AND ROBERTSON, JUSSI BJOERLING, ERNEST BLOCH, EMMA BOYNET, WALTER DAMROSCH, AGNES DAVIS, NELSON EDDY, B. D. FIDANQUE, JR., WALTER GIESEKING, HERTHA GLAZ, GORDON STRING QUARTET, HOWARD HANSON, ROY HARRIS, JASCHA HEIFETZ, WILDER HOBSON, HERBERT JANSSEN, EDWARD JOHNSON, EDWARD KILENYI, ALEXANDER KIPNIS, BENJAMIN KOHON, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, MARIE KURENKO, LOTTE LEHMANN, LUBOSHUTZ AND NEMENOFF, JEANETTE MACDONALD, JOHN MC CORMACK, LAURITZ MELCHIOR, YEHUDI MENUHIN, YELLA PESSL, EGON PETRI, ROSA PONSELLE, FRIEDRICH SCHORR, ELISABETH SCHUMANN, REGINALD STEWART, GLADYS SWARTHOUT, JOSEPH SZIGETI, TRAPP FAMILY SINGERS, VRONSKY AND BABIN, RICHARD Q. WEDDELL, ERNST WOLFF, AND VICTOR YOUNG.

Standard Music

CLAVICHORD

KUHNAU: Biblical Sonata for Clavichord—The Combat Between David and Goliath. Erwin Bodky. Anthologie Sonore No. 3.

First sonatas written for the keyboard were those by Johann Kuhnau (1660-1722), who was Bach's predecessor as cantor of St. Thomas' Church at Leipzig. Kuhnau's descriptive sonata above deals with these feelings and events: Goliath's Bravado; Fear and Prayer of the Israelites; David's Courage; The Combat; The Flight of the Philistines; Triumph of the Israelites; General Dancing and Rejoicing. It is played here upon the Clavichord, a small instrument used in the home throughout the eighteenth century.

HARPSICHORD

BACH: Partita No. 6 in E Minor. Ernst Victor Wolff. Gamut Set 2.

The most delightful music the rococo era produced is contained in the keyboard suites or partitas of Johann Sebastian Bach. The suite is a succession of dance-movements of international character. Charles Sanford Terry says, "The Allemande expressed the solemn nature of the German, the Courante the fervid temperament of the Italian, the Sarabande the courtly dignity of Spain, the Gigue the robust jollity of the Englishman, and the Minuet or Gavotte the refined gaiety of France."

PIANO

BACH: Well-Tempered Clavichord, Volume 1—Prelude and Fugue No. 1 in C Major and Prelude and Fugue No. 2 in C Minor. Harold Samuel (piano). Victor 9124.

Master of the fugue form is, of course, Bach. Leaving aside his vast technical dictionary The Art of Fugue, the general music lover turns for abiding pleasure to the forty-eight preludes and fugues which comprise The Well-Tempered Clavichord. This "bible of the pianist" is the very foundation of modern piano technic.

BEETHOVEN: Sonata No. 32 in C Minor (Opus 111). Egon Petri. Columbia Set 263.

An example of the last-period pianistic style of Beethoven is his towering final sonata, in two movements, the second of which is a set of variations. It was written in 1822 and shows Beethoven in that phase of perfect isolation from his fellowmen, which is characteristic also of his last five string quartets, the Missa Solemnis, the Ninth Symphony and the other four final piano sonatas.

BRAHMS: Intermezzo in B Minor (Opus 119, No. 1); and Intermezzo in E Minor (Opus 119, No. 2). Wilhelm Bachaus. Victor (Fr. alb) M-321, 14134.

"As a composer, Brahms is most closely related to Beethoven in his depth, outlook on life and profound adoration of nature. Austerity is the character of most of his works. They are strict in formal conception, replete with counterpoint, virile rhythms, passionate or folk melodies. Prolific in all branches of music except the opera, Brahms is both the greatest absolute musician since Beethoven and the godfather of many modern composers" (Rosenwald). Charming examples of his examples of his small-scale piano works are the first two intermezzi of Opus 119; centered in the second is Brahms' last waltz.

CHOPIN: Mazurka No. 41 in C Sharp Minor (Opus 63, No. 3), Mazurka No. 45 in A Minor (Opus 67, No. 4); and Nocturne No. 19 in E Minor (Opus 72). Vladimir de Pachmann. Victor 6879.

Chopin contributed a new expressiveness to piano literature. The refined salon style of this composer who was deeply absorbed in the rhythms of his native Poland, which he utilized with great subtlety, can easily be heard in these works of bold harmonic structure and of artful ornamentation, an inspiration to the later impressionists. His nocturnes are supreme examples of romanticism.

DEBUSSY: Réflects dans l 'Eau and Soirée dans Grenade. Walter Gieseking. Columbia (Fr. alb) M-314, 68575.

Impressionism in painting first found its counterpart in music in the works of Claude Debussy. Like Chopin, Debussy evolved a new technique for the creation of an elusive, dream-like world. His use of the whole tone scale and juxtaposed chords presages not only Scriabin, but modernism as well.

SCARLATTI: Eleven Sonatas. Robert Casadesus (piano). Columbia Set 372.

The name of Domenico Scarlatti (1685-1757) is synonymous with that of the harpsichord. He composed over 500 charming "essercizi" (today called sonatas) for this instrument which lend themselves readily to the modern piano. The sonata of Scarlatti's day was a far cry from the lengthy work now associated with the name. In reality his sonatas were short toccatas designed to demonstrate the dexterity of the performer.

SCRIABIN: Sonata No. 4 in F Sharp Major (Opus 30). Katherine Ruth Heyman. Friends of Recorded Music No. 20.

Some critics hear in Scriabin's fourth piano sonata the first notes of the "music of the future." In speaking of this work, A. Eaglefield Hull says, "In harmonic fineness, invention, and handling of themes, in the majesty and power of the themes themselves, this Sonata represents the highest point reached in this period of Scriabin's creative activity."

SCHOENBERG: Drei Klavierstücke (Opus 11)—No. 2 Katherine Ruth Heyman. Friends of Recorded Music No. 9.

The first step toward expressionism is to be found in Arnold Schönberg's Three Pianoforte Pieces, of which this is the second. Here Schönberg turns his back on tonality, but does not as yet write in the twelve-tone system.

PIANO-DUOS

MILHAUD: Scaramouche—Suite for Two Pianos. Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. Victor 12726.

Milhaud's witty suite for two pianos admirably sums up the typical output of present-day French composers, including Auric, Poulenc and Honegger, who stem from Erik Satie. Milhaud, the stern and mystic creator of the opera Christophe Colomb, gives us in this elegant suite a taste of real French sophistication.

HINDEMITH: Sonata for Piano for Four Hands (1938). Jesus Maria Sanroma (primo) and Paul Hindemith (secundo). Victor Set 637.

This composition was first performed at an all-Hindemith concert in New York in 1939 by the two artists who have recorded it, the composer taking the second part. The notes for the album state, in discussing the composer's later works: "The emphasis, it must be noted, is above all not on tonal variety (for he has restricted his range to a viola and piano, or to a piano, four hands) but upon the depth of tonal sonority which can be achieved with the limited means he (Hindemith) has placed at his disposal." Although Hindemith is in exile, he is, ironically enough, considered the greatest German composer of today.

ORGAN

BACH: Passacaglia in C Minor. Carl Weinrich. Musicraft Set 10.

A monument to Bach's gigantic stature is his great Passacaglia in C Minor. Built upon a theme eight measures in length are twenty variations, climaxed by a double fugue. There have been effective orchestral transcriptions of this work, but as played here in its original form, more of Bach's spirit emanates from it than any other arrangement.

FRESCOBALDI: Toccata for the Elevation; and GABRIELI: Four-part Ricercare in the Tenth Tone. Marcel Dupré. Anthologie Sonore No. 4.

First great organ virtuoso was Girolano Frescobaldi (1583-1643) whose popularity was so tremendous that people flocked from miles around to hear him play. This toccata is particularly beautful and serene, quite in contrast to the fiery brilliance of the form as evolved by Andrea Gabrieli, Giovanni's uncle. The four-part ricercare of Giovanni Gabrieli (1557-1612) may be the first fugue with episodes ever written.

VIOLIN

BEETHOVEN: Sonata No. 5 in F Major (Opus 24) (Frühlings). Simon Goldberg (violin) and Lili Kraus (piano). Decca 29026-8.

Beethoven wrote his buoyant Spring sonata in 1801—the year that, according to some musicologists, marks the commencement of his second period of creative activity. This sonata shows, instead of the heroic or melancholy Beethoven, the composer in a genial and light-hearted mood.

BRAHMS: Sonata No. 3 in D Minor (Opus 108). Paul Kochanski (violin) and Artur Rubinstein (piano). Victor Set 241.

Brahms' finest and most beautiful violin sonata is his last, in D Minor. A supreme lyricist, it is in the smaller works such as the songs and the intermezzi for piano, and in this warm sonata, that his true nature is most clearly revealed.

MOZART: Sonata No. 28 in E Minor (K. 304). Joseph Szigeti (violin) and Nikita de Magalov (piano). Columbia 69005-D.

It was probably due to a deepening of Mozart's emotional nature when he was 22, caused by his first acquaintance with love and by the grievous death of his adored mother, that at that time a new maturity appears in his writings. The E Minor violin sonata, in two movements, is a good example of the budding style that was to be known and beloved as "Mozartean."

VIOLA

BLOCH: Suite for Viola and Piano. William Primrose (viola) and Fritz Kitsinger (piano). Victor Set 575.

Swiss-born Ernest Bloch is a citizen of the United States. His works express a gnarled and spontaneous emotionalism that is a pleasing rarity amid the superficial blooms of the common garden-variety of composers writing today. The Suite for Viola and Piano was Bloch's first work to be composed entirely in America. It won the highly coveted Berkshire Chamber Music Festival Competition first prize in 1919.

VIOLONCELLO

BEETHOVEN: Sonata No. 4 in C Major (Opus 102, No. 1). Pablo Casals (cello) and Mieczyslaw Horszkowski (piano). Victor 14366-7.

At the threshold of his third and final period of musical evolution, Beethoven wrote two sonatas for violoncello and piano in 1815. In these Robert Haven Schlauffler notes "a novel plasticity of form, especially in the C Major, the manuscript of which was labeled 'Free Sonata'."

RECORDER

PEZEL: Intrade, Sarabande and Gigue; and Anonymous: Two Old Netherlands Dances—Rondo and Pavane. Trapp Family Choir. Victor 2012.

Ye olde recorder is becoming as popular today in some musical families as it was way back in the fifteenth century. A recorder looks like a flute. It is played end-wise, but has a regular whistle mouthpiece which produces a quaint tone. These old dances are beautifully played and bring to mind the genre paintings of Peter Bruegel.

TRIO

FRANCAIX: Trio in C Major for Strings (1933). Pasquier Trio. Columbia Set X-130.

Blithe young French composer Jean Francaix, outstanding protégé of Nadia Boulanger and Strawinsky, is certainly one of the most gifted and promising of the younger contemporary writers in the neo-classical vein. His trio for violin, viola and cello possesses the vitality and sparkle of youth, as well as a liberal dash of pre-war Gallic wit.

QUARTETS

BARTOK: Quartet No. 1 in A Minor (Opus 7). Pro Arte String Quartet. Victor Set 286.

Like Schönberg, Bartók has received much notice and acclaim from critics, but concertgoers hear practically nothing of the works of either composer. Bartók's first quartet immediately impresses the listener that he is hearing one of the greatest pieces in all chamber music; it is the finest product of expressionistic literature.

BEETHOVEN: Quartet No. 12 in E Flat Major (Opus 127). Busch String Quartet. Victor Set 489.

Aside from the Ninth Symphony, the general public seems unresponsive to or quite unaware of Beethoven's late works such as the last five piano sonatas and the last five string quartets, of which this is one. These final quartets, as Cecil Gray comments, represent "the highest point to which music, considered as an artistic language, has yet attained."

DEBUSSY: Quartet in G Minor (Opus 10). Pro Arte String Quartet. Victor Set 186.

Claude Debussy's first important work was his single string quartet, composed in 1893. This exerted an enormous influence upon modern music throughout the world. At that time, his harmony was considered very daring; the mild dissonances were received joyfully and emulated by the advance guard.

HAYDN: Quartet in F Minor (Opus 20, No. 5). Roth String Quartet. Columbia Set 228.

With repeated hearings afforded by the phonograph, music lovers can discover for themselves that Haydn and Mozart were both distinct and complete entities and not merely forerunners of Beethoven. Sir Donald Tovey writes of the six quartets in Haydn's Opus 20 that "every page is of historical importance . . . there is perhaps no single or sextuple opus in the history of music which has achieved so much, or achieved it so quietly."

MOZART: Quartet in D Major (K. 499). Budapest String Quartet. Victor Set 222.

Mozart's D Major quartet reveals, above all his other chamber works, the polish, craftmanship and simplicity which the discerning have learned to revere and love in his writings.

QUINTETS

SCHUMANN: Quintet in E Flat Major (Opus 44). Artur Schnabel (piano) and Pro Arte String Quartet. Victor Set 267.

Schumann did not have the advantage of training in orchestration, but his innate feeling for melody surmounted what might otherwise have been impassable obstacles. This quintet for piano and strings, the first for that combination that had even been written, shows him working with a much smaller group of instruments. It is the best of Schumann's chamber music and a characteristic utterance of the romantic period.

SCHUBERT: Quintet in C Major (Opus 163). Pro Arte String Quartet and Anthony Pini (cello). Victor Set 299.

Probably sharing honors with the D Minor quartet as the finest of Schubert's chamber music is the C Major quintet, composed in the last year of his life. Spontaneous melody flows unceasingly through everything he wrote; it may well be said that this quintet has the best of Schubert in it.

SEPTET

STRAWINSKY: L'Histoire du Soldat. Instrumental Ensemble—Igor Strawinsky. Columbia Set 184.

United, Bach and jazz flow in the veins of Strawinsky's The Story of a Soldier, a delightful septet, "to be read, played and danced." The handling of the drum is especially interesting and, as Marion Bauer points out, "Strawinsky showed his extraordinary technic of instrumentation in the colossal effects he attained with such slender means."

OCTET

SHOSTAKOVICH: Two Pieces for Octet—Prelude and Scherzo. Octet of the New York Sinfonietta—Max Goberman. Timely 1300.

Dmitri Shostakovich, who made a name for himself with his sensational opera Lady Macbeth of Mzensk and his energetic first symphony, has written two interesting compositions for eight instruments. These modern chamber works are not as radical as one would expect, but gain the attention through purely musical appeal and straightforward musicianship.

STRING AND CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

BACH: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major. Busch Chamber Players—Adolf Busch (Fr. alb) M-249. Columbia 68439-D.

Albert Schweitzer calls Bach's six Brandenburg concertos, written for the margrave of Brandenburg and completed in 1721, the purest products of his polyphonic style. They are, he says, "on the very borderline between chamber music and orchestral music." The third concerto in the set is short, comprising two sections, both labelled "Allegro."

BACH: The Musical Offering—Ricercare in Six Parts. String Orchestra—Edwin Fischer. Victor 8660.

Bach's Musical Offering, a present to Frederick the Great in 1747, contains a series of pieces based on a theme for improvisation suggested by the monarch himself. The six-part ricercare has been called "Bach's richest piece of fugal writing" (Albert Schweitzer). Listed in the Peters edition among the clavier works, it is here arranged for string orchestra.

CORELLI: Concerto Grosso in G Minor (Opus 6, No. 8) (Christmas). London Symphony Orchestra—Bruno Walter. Victor Set 600.

The lovely Christmas concerto of Arcangelo Corelli (1653-1713) belongs to a set of twelve concerti grossi, characterized by interchange between the body of strings in the orchestra and a small group of soloists. This particular concerto embodies two of those slow movements, the structure and style of which have left their mark on subsequent music. The second one—closing the concerto—is a pastoral.

WARLOCK: Capriol Suite. Constant Lambert String Orchestra—Constant Lambert. His Master's Voice C-2904.

Peter Warlock, an English composer whose real name was Philip Heseltine, killed himself in 1930, when he was only 36. His Capriol Suite is a setting for string orchestra of six tunes from a sixteenth century French treatsie on dancing. Only a few dissonances at the end might proclaim that Warlock belongs to our time.

SYMPHONIES

BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major (Opus 55) (Eroica). Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra—Felix Weingartner. Columbia Set 285.

Beethoven's Eroica symphony is, except for the Ninth, his longest in this form and it has been called by some his greatest. An enormous, driving energy bears it powerfully on its way. Certainly the vast radiance of the opening movement, the grieving nobility of the funeral march and the glinting humor of the scherzo, provide excellent examples of these types in the broad catalogue of Beethovian wonders.

BRAHMS: Symphony No. 3 in F Major (Opus 90). London Philharmonic Orchestra—Felix Weingartner. Columbia Set 353.

Brahms' third symphony is the shortest for his four. As in none of the others, its opening theme—descending spaciously—reappears in the final movement. Although modeled according to classical prescription, the Brahms symphonies are pervaded with a romantic warmth and intimacy that contrasts with the subjective approach of the great practitioners in this form who preceded him. The second movement is chorale-like and the third is both lyric and passionate.

HAYDN: Symphony No. 104 in D Major (London). London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia Set 409.

When Haydn is called the "Father of the Symphony," this means he developed the form, but it does not mean he invented it. However, he found the rules of sonata-form cramping and tiresome many times, and, as Sir Donald Tovey points out, his most nearly regular works are early. The magnificent 104th and final London symphony is as unpredictable as any. Tovey finds it "arguably the greatest of Haydn's instrumental works."

MOZART: Symphony No. 35 in D Major (K. 385) (Haffner). London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beechom. Columbia Set 399.

Commentators on Mozart generally refer to his last three symphonies in a manner that suggests capital letters as well as a complete and unapproachable isolation from the rest of his works. They are apt to forget that, especially for the lay listener, there is at least equal appeal in the earlier Haffner Symphony. This exhibits the charm and taste of Mozart's ideas and the exquisite orchestral texture he wove about them.

PROKOFIEFF: Classical Symphony in D Major (Opus 25). Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. Victor 7196-7.

Prokofieff's Classical Symphony (1918) is written in a style that was prevalent two centuries ago, but the treatment is unmistakably modern. Whether it is meant to be a brilliant parody, or a serious pastiche, is no matter. The music is extremely witty and altogether enchanting. On the fourth side are the Marche and Scherzo from Prokofieff's four-act opera The Love for Three Oranges (Opus 33), commissioned by the Chicago Opera Company and first performed in 1921.

SIBELIUS: Symphony No. 5 in E Flat Major (Opus 82). Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. In Victor Set 474.

Sibelius is best known by his first two symphonies and Finlandia, but his real greatness resides in his later works, where "on the side of the form . . . this music is a law unto itself" (Ernest Newman). The great fifth symphony, like the sixth a point of relaxation between the concentrated fourth and the even shorter seventh, is immediate in its attraction.

HARRIS: Symphony No. 3. Boston Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Set 651.

The third symphony (1938-39) of the American Roy Harris is in a single movement and is less than twenty minutes in duration. Koussevitzky and many other critics regard it as the first truly great orchestral work to be produced in this country.

SYMPHONIC POEMS

DEBUSSY: Prelude—L'Après Midi d'un Faune. London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia 69600-D.

Musical impressionism, which is described by Hans Rosenwald as the expression of "emotional reaction" rather than "depiction of tangible subjects," first appeared in the works of Claude Debussy. The Afternoon of a Faun," written as a prelude to Mallarmé's strange, yet atmospheric, poem, is a "model of transparent orchestration versus the thick impasto of the Wagnerian school."

DELIUS: Two Pieces for Small Orchestra. (1) On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring. Royal Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia 67475-D. (2) Summer Night on the River. London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia 17087-D.

The late Frederick Delius was one of those in England who followed the path of impressionism first walked by Debussy. There is even further subtilization of the idiom in the fragile Two Pieces for Small Orchestra (1911-12), the first of which is based on a Norwegian folk-tune.

LISZT: Les Préludes. Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam—Willem Mengelberg. Columbia Set X-29.

It was Franz Liszt who first applied the name symphonic poem to a piece of music, establishing a new category which has culminated in the long and fitfully great compositions of Richard Strauss. Les Préludes, the most familiar of Listz's twelve tone poems, is here given the best performance of the few that are recorded.

SIBELIUS: Pohjola's Daughter (Opus 49). Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. In Victor 474.

Pohjola's Daughter is capable of standing alone as absolute music, but a program, based on an episode in the old Finnish epic the Kalevala, underlies it and may increase one's enjoyment. It describes a hero-warrior's vain attempt to win a maiden sitting on a raibow who jeers at his failure to perform certain tasks prescribed by her.

STRAUSS: Till Eulenspiegels Lustige Streiche (Opus 28). British Broadcasting Company Symphony Orchestra—Fritz Busch. Victor 11724-5.

Shrewd critics of the Strauss tone poems generally place Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks at the top of the list in the company of Don Juan as the two that are the most complete realizations of his intentions and free from the banality, perversity and choppiness that mar his larger and more pretentious scores. Till is a hearty figure from medieval legend who after various adventures comes to his end on the scaffold. As the rest of the title adds, this music is "After the Old-Fashioned Roguish Manner—in Rondo Form."

WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll. Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York—Arturo Toscanini. Victor (alb) M-308, 14009-10.

In discussing a list of scores he would like to carry with him if he were cast on a desert island, Ernest Newman once wrote that he might throw out Tristan und Isolde at the last minute for the Siegfried Idyll. Wagner's beautifully-wrought presentation to his wife on her Christmas birthday belongs on every shelf of masterpieces.

CONCERTOS

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 4 in G Major (Opus 58). Artur Schnabel (piano) and London Philharmonic Orchestra—Malcom Sargent. Victor Set 156.

It is not at all peculiar to prefer Beethoven's fourth piano concerto to his fifth, the Emperor. The fourth, though a product of the composer's middle period, is as searching as some of the great last quartets and sonatas, and more accessible. The curious, brief slow movement, between an opening allegro that has strength and beauty, and a darting rondo-finale, tempts one to call the whole Beethoven's perfect concerto.

BEETHOVEN: Concerto in D Major (Opus 61). Joseph Szigeti (violin) and Orchestra—Bruno Walter. Columbia Set 177.

Despite the fact that some critics have lately taken to rapping Beethoven's only concerto for violin, most concertgoers find continual satisfaction in it and are not apt to quibble over whether there is commonplace material in the first movement and in the finale. The whole is on an enormous scale. Undoubtedly the slow movement is one of Beethoven's best, poised so serenely in the center of the pattern.

BRAHMS: Concerto in D Major (Opus 77). Jascha Heifetz (violin) and Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Set 581.

For many, the single violin concertos of Beethoven and Brahms are the profoundest and richest of their kind in the repertoire. Brahms' Opus 77 was originally in four movements, but the scherzo had disappeared in the final form. "I have written a poor adagio for it," the composer told a friend in a letter. Every listener will disagree with him. The first sounding of the concerto's opening theme—turning back on itself—begins an enriching experience; and the finale is equally endearing.

BRAHMS: Concerto N. 2 in B Flat Major (Opus 83). Artur Schnabel (piano) and British Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra—Sir Adrian Boult. Victor Set 305.

Sir Donald Tovey writes that of all existing concertos in classical form, this is the largest. It has four movements instead of the usual three, since there are two allegros. This is not a concerto in the ordinary sense, but a "symphony with piano." The rising horn theme at the opening, the contemplative entrance of the piano in the slow movement, and the variegated finale, are impressions that echo persistently when one thinks of Brahms' B Flat piano concerto.

GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue. George Gershwin (piano) and Paul Whiteman's Concert Orchestra—Paul Whiteman. Victor 35822.

Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue has delighted the multitude and the musician alike since it was first performed at a New York concert of modern jazz in 1924. For the one, it is both comprehensible and easy to remember; for the other, it is an interesting and successful, if not highly important, welding of jazz and the Lisztian manner. This recording does not contain the complete score.

MOZART: Concerto No. 24 in C Minor (K. 491). Robert Casadesus (piano) and Orchestre Symphonique de Paris—Eugène Bigot. Columbia Set 356.

Listening to a rehearsal of this Mozart concerto, Beethoven turned to his companion and exclaimed, "Oh, my dear fellow, we shall never get any idea like this!" It has been hazarded he was referring to the last variation in the finale, but it will occur to other listeners that there are many more passages which might have occasioned the remark, and that there seems no reason to expect he would have waited until the final movement.

PROKOFIEFF: Concerto No. 1 in D Major (Opus 19). Joseph Szigeti (violin) and London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia Set 244.

This short concerto, in one, continuous movement, runs to about twenty minutes in length. It is vigorous and modern in its handling. The three sections are labelled "Andantino," "Scherzo-Vivacissimo" and "Moderato." Listen to the long bitter-sweet melody at the first entrance of the violin. Prokofieff once told an interviewer in Budapest: "Szigeti is the greatest interpreter of my concerto."

RACHMANINOFF: Concerto No. 2 in C Minor (Opus 18). Benno Moiseivitsch (piano) and London Philharmonic Orchestra—Walter Goehr. Victor Set 666.

Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto has a firm grip on the imagination and affections of the concertgoing public. Written in 1901, it is bathed in the late glow of the romantic movement, especially in the adagio. The first movement, opened by piano chords, is striking, and the finale is headlong excitement.

BLOCH: Concerto for Violin and Orchestra. Joseph Szigeti (violin) and Orchestre de la Société des Concerts du Conservatoire—Charles Munch. Columbia Set 380.

In the London Sunday Times, Ernest Newman recently wrote, "Bloch's violin concerto . . . is in most respects a finer work of art than Beethoven's; but the average concert-goer's taste has become too standardized and mechanized for him to perceive so simple a fact just yet." Joseph Szigeti, the soloist in the recording, was soloist in the first performance of the work, at Cleveland in 1938.

WALTON: Concerto for Viola and Orchestra. Frederick Riddle (viola) and London Symphony Orchestra—William Walton. Decca Set 8.

Sir Donald Tovey's analysis of Walton's viola concerto (1929) describes the work in the course of an essay as "throughout large in all its aspects." He concludes by saying: "This seems to me to be one of the most important modern concertos for any instrument, and I can see no limits to what may be expected of the tone-poet who could create it."

OVERTURES

MOZART: The Magic Flute (K. 620)—Overture. British Broadcasting Company Symphony Orchestra—Arturo Toscanini. Victor 15190.

It is customary to cite the overture to Mozart's opera The Magic Flute (a jumbled, fairy-tale "Singspiel" with superb music) as his greatest. The three chords with which it opens are said to have Masonic reference and they recur later, in the second act. In the overture, there is use of both sonata and fugue form.

BEETHOVEN: Lenore Overture No. 3 in C Major (Opus 72a). Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra—Bruno Walter. Victor Set 359.

The Leonore Overture No. 3 is one of four that Beethoven wrote to introduce his sole opera Fidelio. It is not used at the beginning, however, but is sometimes inserted in the opera at a later point. Its place in any list of dramatic overtures is at the very top.

MENDELSSOHN: The Hebrides Overture (Opus 26). London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia 69400-D.

This overture also goes by the name of Fingal's Cave, in which Mendelssohn was actually standing when the opening theme occurred to him. It is one of the few works that seem to have survived the brutal reaction against Mendelssohn's compositions after the indiscriminate worship he was accorded while living. Wagner called it an "aquarelle."

TSCHAIKOWSKY: Overture - Fantasia—Romeo and Juliet. Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Set 347.

The public at large recently was introduced to a passage from this "overture-fantasia." It was the love theme, and it poured from radio and phonograph as the opening phrase of a popular song called Our Love. Its original setting is more flattering to it. As the work was inspired by Shakespeare's play, commentators find references in the music to Friar Laurence, the street brawl, etc.

ROSSINI: The Barber of Seville—Overture. Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York—Arturo Toscanini. Victor 7255.

You can find The Barber of Seville cited as "the greatest of all comic operas" by a composer who is "the last outstanding figure in the field of opera buffa" (Cecil Gray). The twinkling overture to it is so remarkably fresh that the unintiated hearer is not likely to guess it is over a hundred years old.

WAGNER: Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg—Overture. London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia 68854-D.

The great Meistersinger overture needs no introduction to the majority of the musical public. Its marvellous polyphony and the rushing overflow of its melodic beauty are familiar to many who have no knowledge of any of the rest of the score beyond the "Prize Song."

SUITES AND BALLETS

PURCELL-BARBIROLLI: Suite for Strings. Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York—John Barbirolli. Victor Set 533.

In Barbirolli's arrangement of various pieces from the "Dramatik Musick" of the great English composer, he uses only the strings, four horns, two flutes and English horn. The collection of these pieces into a synthetic suite has been done very skillfully. The largo is the famous "When I am Laid in Earth" from the opera Dido and Aeneas.

PISTON: The Incredible Flutist—Ballet Suite. Boston "Pops" Orchestra—Arthur Fiedler. Victor Set 621.

These excerpts are drawn from a ballet score composed in 1938 by an American, Walter Piston, and performed in the same year in Boston under Fiedler's direction. Verve and smartness prevail. The sections include: Introduction and Dance of the Vendors; Entrance of Customers and Tango of the Merchant's Daughters; Arrival of the Circus, March, Solo of the Flutist, Minuet and Spanish Waltz; Siciliano Duet and Polka Finale.

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloe—Suite No. 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky. Victor 7143-4.

A forthright English critic states he would not think Ravel worth considering at all if he had not written the Greek pastoral ballet Daphnis et Chloe for the celebrated impressario Sergei Diaghileff. But that, he thinks, is a modern masterpiece. This is the second and most familiar of the two suites drawn from the ballet. It shows Ravel's gift for brilliant orchestral coloring at its most spectacular.

STRAWINSKY: The Fire Bird—Orchestral Suite. Philadelphia Orchestra—Leopold Stokowski. Victor Set 291.

Strawinsky's music for The Fire Bird is the earliest of his works known to the general public. It, too, is beautifully and gorgeously colored. It has always been a source of regret to conservatives, who by a generous stretch can accept Petrouchka, that Strawinsky did not continue writing in this vein instead of embarking on a series of experiments with various styles.

HANDEL-HARTY: Water Music Suite. London Philharmonic Orchestra—Sir Hamilton Harty. Columbia Set X-13.

These pieces were written to accompany the progress of the royal barge at a water-party on the river Thames (they were arranged by the present conductor). There is a legend that through them there was effected a reconcilation between His Highness and Handel, who was supposed to have been out of favor.

ORCHESTRAL VARIATIONS

BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Opus 56a). Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York—Arturo Toscanini. Victor Set. 355.

The theme Brahms uses as the basis of these eight variations and finale is inscribed "Corale St. Antonii"—a melody that manages to be majestic in spite of its hobble-skirt. The variations are rich in imagination and make brilliant use of the resources of the orchestra. Variety of mood and rhythm is maintained superbly throughout; the victorious march of the finale builds up to a massive impressiveness.

ELGAR: Variations on an Original Theme (Opus 36) (Enigma). British Broadcasting Company Symphony Orchestra—Sir Adrian Boult. Victor Set 475.

This work is dedicated "To my Friends Pictured Within." Elgar prefaces every variation with a single name or a set of initials, each of which has been identified. It is not necessary to consider Elgar a great composer in order to enjoy the charm and inventiveness of these fourteen variations, the last referring to the composer himself. There is a quotation from Mendelssohn's A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage in the thirteenth.

OPERA

BEETHOVEN: Fidelio—Abscheulicher, wo eilst du hin? Kirsten Flagstad (soprano) and Philadelphia Orchestra—Eugene Ormandy. Victor 14972.

Only once did Beethoven turn the immense power of his dramatic genius toward the creation of an opera. The above aria occurs at an exciting point in the first act of his lone work in this form, Fidelio. The aria proper, beginning with the words "Komm Hoffnung," is deeply moving and thrilling in its sincerity.

BELLINI: Norma—Casta Diva. Rosa Ponselle (soprano), Metropolitan Opera Chorus and Orchestra—Giulio Setti. Victor 8125.

Bellini has been hailed the father of modern melody in his early employment of "the particular vein of passionate ecstasy and elegiac melancholy which suddenly comes into music in the first half of the nineteenth century" (Cecil Gray). Norma is the only work of his that appears in the operatic repertoire of this country.

GERSHWIN: Porgy and Bess—It Takes a Long Pull to Get There, Summertime, A Woman is a Sometime Thing and It Ain't Necessarily So. Paul Robeson (bass) and Orchestra. Victor 26358-9.

Porgy and Bess (1935) was the score Gershwin believed to contain some of his best music. These songs, although belonging to an "American folk opera," were nevertheless of wide popular appeal because they resembled former Gershwin tunes used in his musical comedies.

GLUCK: Armide—Ah! si la Liberté and Mozart: Don Giovanni (K. 527)—Or sai chi l'onore. Frieda Leider (soprano) and Orchestra. His Master's Voice D1547.

Armide (1777) is the fifth in the series of six operas with which Gluck rescued the form from the inanity of the Italian stage. Its characters are not puppets but humans whose music differentiates them from one another and who are sometimes viewed from a psychological angle. The libretto permits dealings with essential emotions; it has not been used as a framework for vapid prettiness or irrelevant display. "Or sai chi l'onore" is an example of Mozart's dramatic arias. It is from Don Giovanni which Bernard Shaw once wrote is the greatest opera ever composed.

HONEGGER: Judith—Cantique funèbre, Invocation, Fanfare, Incantation, Interlude, Cantique des Vierge and Cantique de la Victoire. Claire Croiza (soprano), J. van Hertbruggen (soprano), "Coecilia" Chorus and Antwerp Orchestra—L. de Vocht. Columbia Set X-78.

Honegger, major member of the French group "Les Six," composed his opera Judith in 1925. The section included here are from all three acts. Guido Pannain, speaking of the opera's "frenzied vocalism," says that therein Honegger found "in the religious exaltation of his soul the key of enchantment and redemption."

MOUSSORGSKY: Boris Godounov—Prayer and Death of Boris. Feodor Chaliapin (bass) and Royal Opera House Orchestra—Vincenzo Bellezza. Victor 15177.

The work of the great and rugged Russian genius Moussorgsky reaches the public, apparently, only in an occasional performance of his Boris Godounov or of a few songs. This recording was made at an actual presentation at Covent Garden a number of years ago, but it crackles with the electricity of a theater performance and looms a monument to Chaliapin's overwhelming intrepretation of the title role.

MOZART: Die Entführung aus dem Serail (K. 384)—Martern aller Arten; and Die Zauberflöte (K. 620)—Der hölle Rache. Miliza Korjus and Orchestra. His Master's Voice EH898.

The Escape from the Harem and The Magic Flute are the only two in the great series of Mozart's last operas that were written to German librettos. The aria listed first above is one of the most difficult for coloratura in the entire range of opera, and probably shares its peak of eminence only with the glittering outburst "Der hölle Rache". Both, though very high and florid, make no sacrifice to expressiveness, however.
BERLIOZ: Les Troyens à Carthage—Royal Hunt and Storm. Halle Orchestra—Sir Hamilton Harty. Columbia 68043-D.

This is a symphonic entr'acte from the second part of Berlioz' neglected opera "Les Troyens" (The Trojans, first produced as a whole in 1890). It pictures the departure of Dido's splendidly-attired hunting party in early morning, the storm, Dido's refuge with Aeneas in a cave, their declaration of love, the end of the rain and the peace that settles over the wet countryside.
PERI: Euridice—Giote al canto mio. Salvatore Salvati (tenor), harpsichord and basso continuo. Musiche Italiane Antiche No. 1.

Jacopo Peri (1561-1633) is supposed to have composed the first opera. This, neither performed nor published, was followed by Euridice (1600). The selection above is the "Canto d'Orfeo." The record also includes three madrigals, one by Peri and two by Giulio Caccini (c. 1550-1618), another of the Florentines connected with the beginnings of modern opera.
PUCCINI: Tosca—Vissi d'arte; and Giordano: Andrea Chenier—La Mamma morta. Rosa Raisa (soprano) and La Scala Orchestra—Franco Ghione. Victor 14400.

Puccini is the most popular of recent opera composers. His works are performed more often than those of his contemporaries (except Verdi, whose long life and extensive period of creative activity overlapped his). This aria from Tosca is typical of Puccini's way of writing. The reverse is an aria by a contemporary opera composer (born, 1867) belonging to the school of Mascagni (Cavalleria Rusticana) and Leoncavallo (Pagliacci).
STRAUSS: Salome (Opus 54)—Final Scene. Marjorie Lawrence (soprano) and Pasdeloup Orchestra—Piero Coppola. Victor 8682-3.

When Richard Strauss set to music Oscar Wilde's Salomé in 1909, he infused the score with a pathological realism that was entirely novel. This raised an echoing row with critics and public alike, but paved the way for his own "Elektra" and the later operas of Berg and Milhaud. This record thrillingly conveys the gruesome drama of the final scene where Salomé sings of her love and conquest to the severed head of John the Baptist.
VERDI: Otello—Ave Maria and Willow Song. Elizabeth Rethberg (soprano), and Berlin State Opera Orchestra. Victor 7393.

Bernard Shaw finds Otello Verdi's strongest score; other writers place the next and final opera Falstaff (composed when Verdi was over eighty years old) at the peak of his output. In both of these, Verdi produced masterpieces that contrast strangely with the popular, sometimes raw and vulgar works of his earlier years. These tragic arias are from the last act of Otello.
WAGNER: Siegfried—Final Scene. Florence Easton (soprano), Lauritz Melchior (tenor) and Royal Opera Orchestra—Robert Heger. Victor Set 167.

Wagner dropped work on the score of Siegfried to write Tristan and Meistersinger, so that when he returned to continue with the third section of the enormous Ring, his style had matured to greater subtlety and swifter power. This album contains the closing scene of the opera, from the point where Brünnhilde is awakened.

CHORAL

Example of Discant, Examples of Organum and Diaphony, Hymn in Honor of St. John the Baptist and Plainsong. Palestrina Choir. Victor 20897.

Plainsong or Gregorian chant is "monophonic singing characterized by both floridity of melody and diversity of rhythm." Discant is a "melody treated contrapuntally to a given theme," and organum is "based upon the Greek idea that octave, fifth and fourth are consonances." (Rosenwald). Gregorian chant, believed to have come into existence in the fourth or fifth centuries, is the link between the music of antiquity and the long and glorious flowering of more composition. Discant, organum and diaphony were the first ventures into polyphony, superseding the single line of plainsong.
BACH: Mass in B Minor—Crucifixus and Et Resurrexit. London Philharmonic Choir and London Symphony Orchestra—Albert Coates (Fr. alb) M-104. Victor 9966.

Bach's huge Mass in B Minor may be his greatest work. The Crucifixus with its drooping figure suggestive of exhaustive divinity on the cross is one of the most moving of its sections. The Et Resurrexit, which follows immediately, surges up, renewed and radiantly confident.

ORATORIOS

BERLIOZ: L'Enfance du Christ—Le Repos de la Sainte Famille. Jean Planel (tenor) and Orchestra—F. Ruhlmann. Columbia P-69340-D.

Berlioz' The Childhood of Christ is one of the neglected oratorios that gather dust while the revered but ever-recurrent Messiah of Handel is hauled out for its 804th annual performance. The charm and quietly-breathed fragrance of "The Holy Family Resting by the Wayside" is fully realized in this performance.
HAYDN: The Creation—The Heavens are Telling, and Achieved is the Glorious Work. Royal Choral Society and London Philharmonic Orchestra—Malcolm Sargent. Victor 11960.

This first chorus closes Part One of Haydn's superb oratorio (seldom performed in this country) The Creation; the second closes Part Two. The composer was sixty-five when he wrote it. He once remarked: "I was never so pious as during the time I was working on The Creation. Daily I fell upon my knees and prayed God to grant me strength for the happy execution of this work."
LAMBERT: The Rio Grande. Sir Hamilton Harty (piano), St. Michael's Singers and Halle Orchestra—Constant Lambert. Columbia Set X-52.

Jazz idioms crop up in Constant Lambert's The Rio Grande (by which, according to Sacheverell Sitwell's poem, "they dance no Sarabande"), but the use of them is skillful and in excellent taste. The haunting nostalgia of one of the major themes and the subdued conclusion, with a little splatter in the piano part and some pizzicato in the bass, are unforgettable.

MADRIGALS

BYRD: I Thought That Love Had Been a Boy; MORLEY: Now is the Month of Maying and My Bonnie Lass She Smileth; Sumer is Icumen In. London Madrigal Group—T. B. Lawrence. Victor 4316.

William Byrd (1542/3-1623) is sometimes considered the principal figure in all British music. This example of one of his madrigals is on the same record with two others by Thomas Morley (1557-1603) best known of the Elizabethan school. Sumer is Icumen In, the celebrated Reading Rota, is an anonymous product of the early Middle Ages which has mystified historians as to its origin and astounded musicians by its mastery of form.
MONTEVERDI: Hor ch'el ciela e la terra and Lasciatemi morire. Vocal and Instrumental Ensemble—Nadia Boulanger. (Fr. alb) M-496. Victor 12300.

The Italian revolutionary of the baroque, Claudio Monteverdi, while still linked to the old music as exemplified by Palestrina, pointed forward to the new in his vivid and arresting madrigals. The second selection listed above is an arrangement of the only number preserved from the opera Arianna (1608). It is generally known as The Lament.
JOSQUIN DES PRES: Ave Verum and Ave Coelorum Domina; VICTORIA: Kyrie — Orbis Factor; MAUDUIT: Psalm 150; João 4th: Crux Fidelis; AICHINGER: Ubi Est Abel; PALESTRINA: Missa Assumpta Est. Dijon Cathedral Choir—J. Sampson. Victor Set 212.

This magnificent album contains music of extreme beauty superbly performed by a choir of 120 voices, sixty of which belong to boys between the ages of ten and twelve. These give the music immense range, and give also a tonal luminosity to these examples of Renaissance polyphony.
BLONDEL DE NESLES: A l'entrant d'esté; PERRIN .D'ANGINCOURT: Quand voi a la fin d'estey; RICHARD COEUR-DE-LION: Ja nuns hons pris; WALTHER VON DER VOGELWEIDE: Kreuzfahrlied; MEISTER RUMELANT: Ob aller mynne. Max Meili (tenor) unaccompanied and with Frederick Seidersbeck (viol). Anthologie Sonore No. 18.

With the end of the Dark Ages and the dawn of the Crusades, people felt a new impulse to sing and eagerly accepted the music of the Troubadours in France and the Minnesänger in Germany. These songs were sung either solo or with accompaniment by the vielle, an ancestor of the violin. Best known of the French school is Blondel de Nesles, minstrel to Richard the Lionhearted. Walther von der Vogelweide (c.1170-1230) was the most famous of the Minnesänger, who began activities in Germany a century later.
DEBUSSY: Chansons de Bilitis — La Flute de Pan and La Chevelure. Maggie Teyte (soprano) and Alfred Cortot (piano) Victor (Fr. alb) M-322, 1771.

Mary Garden's favorite of the Debussy songs is the passionate "La Chevelure" from a group of three Songs of Bilitis (1898) with poems from the book by Pierre Loüys. This and the equally impressive "La Flute de Pan" sum up in brief the essence of the attraction of the Debussy chansons with their tense pauses and the mysterious, lingering tenderness of voice and piano.
FAURE: Song Cycle — L'Horizon Chimérique (Opus 113). Charles Panzéra (baritone) and Mme. Panzéra-Baillot (piano). Victor 15037.

An English admirer of the songs of Gabriel Fauré (1845-1924) says they are the high-water marks of French vocal music. Listen to the second song in this cycle (dedicated to M. Panzéra) with the haunting three-note phrase in the piano incessantly changing throughout.

BRAHMS: Am Sonntag Morgen (Opus 49, No. 1), Wie Melodien zieht es mir (Opus 105, No. 1) and O Wüsst ich doch den Weg züruck (Opus 63). Irène Joachim (soprano) and Ludwig Bergmann (piano) His Master's Voice L1055.

The glowing humanity, depth and gentle penetration of Brahms' songs must be apparent at once to anyone who hears the last two lieder listed above. The sorrowful little Am Sonntag Morgen, with limpid consolation by the piano, completes an invaluable miniature collection.

MAHLER: Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen. Kerstin Thorborg (contralto) and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra—Bruno Walter. Columbia 4201-M.

Mahler's songs are touched by a deep melancholy. This one, with orchestral accompaniment, is akin to his masterpiece, the passionate symphonic-song cycle, Das Lied von der Erde.

SCHUBERT: Die Forelle (Opus 32) and Der Tod und das Mädchen (Opus 7, No. 3). Marian Anderson (contralto) and Kosti Vehanen (piano). Victor 1862.

To select two from the extensive treasure-house of over 650 songs which Schubert wrote is difficult. A pair that are representative of him and contrasted in mood are The Trout and Death and the Maiden, the former rapid and lilting, the latter sustained, after a feverish opening.

WOLF: Anakreons Grab and In dem Schatten meiner Locken. Lotte Lehmann (sprano) and Paul Ulanofsky (piano). Victor 1734.

In the songs of Hugo Wolf, the fusion of words and music is perfection itself, the voice and piano having equal importance and reacting subtlely on each other. Most of his finest songs are recorded in the six volumes of the Hugo Wolf Song Society (which the reader is urged to investigate), but single discs are not available separately from them. Above are two fine examples, however.

IVES: Charlie Rutlage, Evening, Ann Street, Two Little Flowers, Resolution and The Greatest Man. Mordecai Baumann (baritone) and Albert Hirsch (piano). New Music Quarterly Recording No. 1412.

The last five of these songs listed above are from a collection of 100 privately printed by Charles Ives, an extremely individual American composer whose early audacities of style antedated Le Sacre du Printemps. Charlie Rutlage is a cowboy song.

Popular Music

BALLADS AND SONGS

This type of music has the widest appeal of any in the popular division. It is conventionally written in the 32 bar A-B-A form, leaving little room for thematic development. The latter is easily superimposed by the jazz soloist. The best recordings, therefore, are invariably ones in which this superimposition is most dexterous.

The representative ballads and songs listed below are characterized by a simple, easily recognized melodic line. In each case, the particular performances selected are those which are among the less stereotyped versions.

Smoke Gets in Your Eyes (Kern). Bert Ambrose & Orchestra. Decca 333.

Ol' Man River (Kern). Paul Robeson, baritone. Victor 25376.

Easter Parade (Berlin). Jimmie Lunceford & Orchesetra. Columbia 35484.

Blue Skies (Berlin). Edgar Hayes Quintet. Decca 1684.

Summertime (Gershwin). Sidney Bechet Quintet. Blue Note 6.

The Man I Love (Gershwin). Benny Goodman Quartet. Victor 25644.

F.D.R. Jones. Hal Kemp & Orchestra. Victor 26038.

I Got Rhythm (Gershwin). Red Norvo & Orchestra. Decca 779.

Night and Day (Porter). Quintet of Hot Club of France. Decca 23067.

Begin the Beguine (Porter). Art Shaw & Orchestra. Bluebird 7746.

Deep Purple (DeRose). Paul Whiteman & Concert Orchestra. Victor 36131.

Dear Old Southland (Layton). Sidney Bechet Quartet. Blue Note 13.

My Reverie (Debussy-Clinton). Bing Crosby, vocalist. Decca 2123.

Indian Summer (Herbert). Sidney Bechet Quintet. Bluebird 10623.

Donkey Serenade (Friml). Bert Ambrose & Orchestra. Decca 2779.

Ziguener (Coward). Art Shaw & Orchestra. Bluebird 10127.

Stormy Weather (Kolar). Art Tatum, pianist. Decca 1603.

Star Dust (Carmichael). Jimmie Lunceford & Orchestra. Decca 369.

Rockin' Chair (Carmichael). Mildred Bailey, vocalist. Vocalion 3553.

Solitude (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Brunswick 6987.

Sophisticated Lady (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Brunswick 6600.

Dancing in the Dark (Schwartz). Victor Salon Orchestra. Victor 22848.

The Lady is a Tramp (Rodgers-Hart). Tommy Dorsey's Clambake Seven. Victor 25673.

Body and Soul (Heyman-Sour-Green). Earl Hines, pianist. Bluebird 10642.

Just a Gigolo (Casuicci). Raymond Scott & Orchestra. Columbia 35363.

SWING

This term applies to a large and highly varied selection of popular tunes. As the word is generally used, it is taken to mean a method of playing. Such a loose usage of the word is not at all satisfactory for choosing an ideal library, ecclectic in scope. It must be, therefore, a matter of selecting pieces in which the material itself, not the treatment, is the dominating factor.

For purposes of classification, the best swing music may be divided into (1) jump tunes and stomps (2) melodies of a slower and more tenuous character, best described as mood music. Jumps and stomps are based upon a series of repeated short phrases (riffs). These riffs, some of them traditional cliches, others utterly insipid phrases, are treated with simple variations, usually divided between ensemble and solo work. The appeal of the jump tunes and stomp lies in their ceaseless, pounding 4/4 rhythm. They make excellent dance music, and when played with fervour and sincerity, they frequently become highly emotional. In the main, the tunes chosen represent a fresher, more sincere, and more original, approach than is found in the average.

On the whole, mood music is less insistent in its rhythms. Moods are created by diversified use of harmonies, colors, and timbres.

Jumps and Stomps

Tiger Rag (LaRocca). Boston Pops Orchestra. Victor 4466.

Maple Leaf Rag (Joplin). Sidney Bechet & His Feetwarmers. Bluebird 7614.

I'd Love It (Redman). McKinney's Cotton Pickers. Bluebird 10706.

In the Mood (Garland). Glen Miller Big Four. Hot Record Society 2001.

China Boy (Boutelje). Bechet-Spanier & Orchestra. Bluebird 10416.

Sugar Foot Stomp (Oliver). Fletcher Henderson & Orchestra. Bluebird 10247.

Tarantula (Phillips). Bert Ambrose & Orchestra. Decca 1206.

Buzzin' Around With the Bee (Hancock). Lionel Hampton & Orchestra. Victor 25575.

I'm Gonna Stomp Mr. Henry Lee. Eddie Condon & Orchestra. Bluebird 10168.

Fidgety Feet (Edwards). Fletcher Henderson & Orchestra. United Hot Clubs of America 21-22.

Cotton Tail (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Victor 26610.

Variety Stomp (Waller). Fletcher Henderson & Orchestra. Bluebird 10246.

Ostrich Walk & Riverboat Shuffle. Frankie Trumbauer & Orchestra. United Hot Clubs of America 29-30.

Mood Music

Reminiscing in Tempo (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Brunswick 7546-47.

Just a Mood (Wilson). Teddy Wilson Quartet. Brunswick 7973.

Azure (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Brunswick 7997.

Dance of the Octopus (Norvo). Red Norvo, marimbist. Brunswick 8236.
I'm Prayin' Humble (Haggert). Bob Crosby & Orchestra. Decca 2210.

LATIN AMERICAN MUSIC

The tango, rhumba, bolero and conga in recent years have become an important part of popular music in America. They have brought about a new trend in dancing, and from a musical standpoint have offered a stimulus to jazz rhythm.

La Cumparsita, tango; Jungle Drums, bolero; Neugro Aresa, canto negroid; Autoconga, conga; Cuban Episode, rhumba loca; Calientito, son; Xavier Cugat & Orchestra. Victor Set P-9.
I Want My Mama, zamba. Xavier Cugat & Orchestra. Victor 26522.
Siboney, rhumba. Xavier Cugat & Orchestra. Victor 26522.
The Man Who Came to Rhumba (Andre). Fabian Andre & Orchestra. Columbia 35447.
Perfidia. Xavier Cugat & Orchestra. Victor 26334.

SYMPHONIC JAZZ

Symphonic Jazz represents an attempt to merge the jazz and classical traditions. Many such attempts have been both interesting and exciting, in the compositions below here listed are just a few of the more representative.
An American in Paris (Gershwin). Paul Whiteman & Concert Orchestra. Decca. 29054-55.
Young Man With a Harp (Seusse). Casper Reardon, harpist, Dana Seusse, piano, Chauncey Morehouse, percussion. Schirmer Set 8.
Creole Rhapsody (Ellington). Duke Ellington & Orchestra. Victor 36049.
Lament for the Living (Harold). Victor & Brunswick Concert Orchestra, Charles Harold, pianist. Brunswick 20119.
Mississippi Suite (Grofe). Paul Whiteman & Concert Orchestra. Victor 35859.
Pavane (Gould). Glenn Miller & Orchestra. Bluebird 10286.

Supplemental Listings

(Editorial Note: In the foregoing there is propounded what may be well considered as a model record library. Obviously the fact that any recording or album is omitted is no reflection on the quality of the work or performance. In order to indicate the manifold possibilities of expanding this basic library we have invited a number of well known musicians in various branches to suggest what they consider their best contributions to the world of recorded music. The following recordings are their suggestions.)

The Story of the Phonograph

IN ITS 40-year battle to eminence, recorded music has three times come up off the canvas after taking a count of nine.

It seemed headed for oblivion once in 1905 while still an unaccepted industry, again in 1925, and finally in the lean years of the depression when record sales plunged to a mere fraction of the towering figures they achieved in the boom twenties. Reasons for this multiple decline and resuscitation can easily be traced to factors in the industry itself.

A Frenchman, Leon Scott, is credited with the first conception of the phonograph, or "Phonautograph" as he called his new contraption. This was in 1855, but the idea was either too hazy or too poorly presented to secure any financial backing, and the scheme was abandoned.

In 1877 however, the more practical Thomas A. Edison took up the idea and the day dream assumed concrete form. Other engineering pioneers became interested. In 1881 Emil Berliner conceived the idea of pressing a number of records from a master rather than spoiling the original disc by playing it back as his predecessors had done. Ten years later he showed the device to Eldridge Johnson of Camden, N. J., and Johnson was fascinated. A new industry was born.

But the public failed to see it. The phonograph was regarded generally as a toy. Buyers scrupulously avoided the machine and — what was worse — reputable musicians refused to record for it.

The break came in 1906 and was directly due to three factors: Heroic advertising efforts, the introduction of the concealed-horn victrola by Victor, and the recordings of Enrico Caruso. Sales of some of the Caruso records still stand untouched in record history.

But in 1921 radio came into the picture, not only a new idea but a vast improvement in sound reproduction. Beside it the phonograph, which still used the old acoustic process of the early 1900's, was pale in contrast. By 1925 millions of talking machines had been relegated to the attic while the public wondered vaguely, if at all, whether the things were still being made.

The next year their doubts were dispelled with the orthophonic phonograph, the tonal equal of the finest radios of the day. It brought with it the realization that radio was not and never could be the musical rival of the phonograph. The two instruments occupied different fields.

It was also about this time that recording itself underwent a tremendous transformation. Discs had previously been recorded through an elongated horn which, because of its ability to concentrate sound, moved the needle over the disc in proportion to the singer's lung power. Now however, a microphone was employed and the recording done by an electrical process. The results were so startlingly realistic that they could be compared only with the music in the original.

Once again records and phonographs were in the sun and sales figures approached their former levels. And, once again, they were dealt a body blow by some outside agency.

In 1929 came the depression and for five years notices were appearing all over the country hinting that the record business had seen its last. Actually there were still remaining large numbers of record fans who were willing to spend their money but nobody was certain of that then.

The first step in the revival was "Higher Fidelity," an incredibly realistic recording system so sensitive that it is capable of reproducing overtones beyond the scope of the human ear. Instruments were redesigned, prices reduced and the record player attachment for radio users was introduced.

The results are well-enough known now. Since 1933 record sales have doubled and quadrupled. Of course the sweeping popularity of swing and its offspring, 250,000 coin phonographs — played a large part. Returning prosperity also helped, along with the demand for certain artists created by radio. But in the main the record industry has fought its own fight until it can now claim, together with the radio, the credit of bringing about a growing American interest in classical music, a rebirth of attention to enduring entertainment.

Parallel with the development of the phonograph has been the development of the manufacture of records. It now takes just 36 seconds to transform a shapeless lump of plastic into Beethoven's Fifth Symphony or the Streamline Strut. But that, as you can imagine, is not the complete picture.

The saga of a phonograph record actually begins in India and the Dutch East Indies where a few of the ten different ingredients that go into a record are gathered and packed. It continues then through five principal stages before it is ready for the market.

Contrary to popular conception, records are not made of wax. In fact there is no wax — or rubber — in them. They are compounded and treated from resins and shellac and various different types of fillers in a formula that is constantly being improved.

Actually there are two separate discs that are referred to as records in the recording of music: one the plastic platter on sale in the corner music store, and the other the studio disc on which the music or sound is first engraved. The studio disc contains no wax either but a blend of substances more resembling soap. This is melted, centrifuged and poured through a very fine mesh to remove all foreign particles, then allowed to flow out smooth on a circular metal plate, ready for the studio.

In the studio control room, similar to those seen in radio stations, this disc is revolved at the same speed at which the finished record is to be played while a recorder, with sapphire cutting point, inscribes the spiral grooves. Music is transferred to the record through a microphone which changes the sound waves into electrical impulses which in turn vibrate the cutting head as it travels its spiral path.

At this point it would be entirely possible to "play back" the transcribed disc, but it would only be possible once and the circular grooves, because of the delicacy of the material so carefully engraved, would be no good for any further reproductions. Consequently the next step is to use the disc as a mould in producing a "matrix," a negative of the record with tiny ridges corresponding to the record's grooves.

This is accomplished through a refined technique of coating the entire surface of the disc with a film of silver or gold — which are of high electrical conductivity — and placing the whole in an electroplating copper bath. When the copper has formed on the disc in sufficient thickness, it is stripped off and the result is the matrix, or "original" or "master."

At this point again, it would be possible to use this copper duplicate to press out records. To do so would be unwise however, lest it be damaged beyond repair. So, the whole process is repeated, with minor variations, to produce first another positive and then a number of negatives from the positive. These final negatives or matrices are used for the stamping of records while the master is kept for the files.

At this stage the matrices are introduced to the "record biscuits," the plastic whose ingredients have come from all over the world. These materials have been weighed out into proper proportions, carefully mixed and converted into a plastic by the application of heat in closed milling chambers. The resulting plastic mass is then sheeted, cut into biscuits, cooled and delivered to the press room.

The actual stamping operation is performed in hydraulic presses which first heat then cool the biscuit to insure perfect duplication. The circular labels are not glued on or pasted but actually pressed into the record materials. Only remaining steps now are to round and smooth off the edges, inspect the finished discs and place them in envelopes ready for your living room and buyers all over the world.

A man should hear a little music, read a little poetry, and see a fine picture every day of his life, in order that worldly cares may not obliterate the sense of the beautiful which God has implanted in the human soul.—Goethe.

Judging Records

By DAVID EUGENE CLAYMAN

TO SAY what a positive influence records have been upon our lives and, more particularly, in the renaissance of music appreciation, might be superfluous. In fact, even the newly initiated record collector will appreciate this truth: that in records he has the only popularly available means by which he can hear a composition played repeatedly, either for pure, unalloyed pleasure or for close and intimate study.

Naturally, the first essential in assembling a record collection is the choice of music itself. It is not the writer's intention here to dictate or suggest points of taste. You yourself know whether or not you care for the chamber music of Brahms or Schubert, the songs of Hugo Wolf or Stephen Foster, the waltzes of Johann Strauss, the operas of Wagner or Verdi, the symphonies of Mozart, Haydn, or Beethoven, the tone poems of Richard Strauss or Claude Debussy, or the symphonies of Jean Sibelius or Dmitri Shostakovich. These things are for you to decide. Whether or not you consider yourself a student in musical aesthetics, you are at least a music lover. If you prefer Benny Goodman or boogie-woogie you are still exercising your own personal taste.

The thing most important after the choice of music itself is the interpretation of the performer. You will know in your own mind, at first hearing, if the interpretation is to your own liking. You will not have to be a connoisseur to decide whether or not the record or records in question can take an honorable place in your library, or any place at all, for that matter. In this factor, however, be as broadminded as possible. Bear in mind, for instance, that there are interpreters of similar stature to your own favorite. The other fellow has reasons for his preference, and can supply plausible reasons for his choice.

However, with reference to records as mechanical devices, there can be little doubt that they possess certain more or less tangible properties. Perhaps the most adversely criticized characteristic of modern records has been reproduction quality. Strangely enough, this current reproduction quality of modern phonograph records is less at fault than the manner in which they are played. The modern record company has found science and art completely cooperative. Nowhere have we seen finer mechanical precision in workmanship than that of the professional record manufacturer. Never has there been more solicitous attention upon the part of the record maker and the artist mutually, nor a more acute study of the delicate problems pertaining to that art. Today, there is no sound or combination of sounds audible to man which cannot be reproduced by the record maker.

If you can create nearly perfect listening and reproduction conditions, you are then in the best position to pass judgment upon the reproduction quality, the quantity and degree and causes of distortion, the surface "noise level," or any of the quasi-technical factors which make for good or bad records. But unfortunately, you cannot have perfect listening conditions in the ordinary record-listening booth, which is the usual "premiere" for your record's performance. Bear in mind, too, that there are three important factors which will affect reproduction quality of your record (1) the record, itself, (2) the instrument upon which the record is played, and (3) the listening conditions. It is not the intent of this article to touch upon the latter two factors, which are vast problems in the study of the phonograph and in acoustics.

We must perforce return to the example of any record and the booth in the record shop. Use steel or chromium needles. Raise the volume control to at least the half-way point. Turn the tone control, that is, the bass-treble control, until you can hear the highest notes or tones in the instrument, such as the upper reaches of the violin, the piccolo, the oboe or a coloratura soprano. The piccolo's tone will be exceedingly brilliant and so piercing that its cutting edge will sometimes be almost unpleasant. Charles O'Connell describes the oboe's tone quality as "green and bittersweet." At any rate, it has a unique reedyness and if your record's fidelity is there, you will hear it. Now, for our example of the coloratura. The extremely high notes should "come out," undeterred by distorition of a metallic or scratchy nature. These high notes must have a freedom, a sense of space and a velocity about them, which are inherent in high frequencies. While your instrument is still set for the "highs," listen closely, in the quieter passages and in the momentary rests and pauses, for the surface noise. The metal needles will show them up. Listen for "weaviness." Listen for "bumps," caused usually by warped records, that may have been stored in a very warm place. If you like piano records, listen, in the slower passages, for what is known as harmonic distortion. When the pianist has the sustaining pedal down, there should be harmonic or sympathetic vibration of (at least) one octave higher in a good, tuned piano. There should be a sense of tone which has body, tone "which can be touched," it is so emphatically real. The piano, until about five years ago, was one of the most difficult of instruments to record. But today, look for extreme resonance in bass chord passages and in all the complete piano range. The recording must have grand piano character. In pizzicatti passages of the stringed instruments and in harp passages, listen for the actual plucking which sets the string going. Close your eyes. Is this the real thing? Do not listen to a record as such. Listen to a contrabassoon, to a 'cello, to a saxophone, to the human voice. If the record does not succeed in creating that sort of an illusion, if it does not have that identifying "aliveness" of vibration or tone quality, then it is not what we term high fidelity or reproduction quality.

Beyond listening for "highs" and "lows" in the orchestra, in the voice, in the chorus, in the jazz band—and adjusting the tone and volume controls so that they will allow these high and low frequencies to pass, there are other problems. Distortion, muddiness of tone, lack of separation of instrumental timbre. They are almost one and the same thing. Raise and lower the volume control in these distorted passages. You can soon tell, how much of it may be caused by the small record booth (which may aid in magnifying these bad features) and how much is caused by a defective recording.

Another experiment. Take two different records from the same master disc, or two different interpretations of the same composition; take a very small section that has something unique about it upon which you wish to base your comparison, say two or three measures, in other words — identical passages on each of the two different interpretations. They may have been made by two different record manufacturers or by the same manufacturer at two different occasions. Whatever the case is, you yourself can tell which "sounds better" to you, even if you are still in that small record booth. You will be the final one to judge, in this extremely simple way, these matters of reproduction quality, distortion, instrumental character and the like.

Before we abandon the problem of distortion, which is an ugly creature, let us weed out or trace some of the other causes of it in our record. Too low a volume setting, especially in symphonic works will be one trouble. Find a middle point (if possible) in the dynamic range of that surface, set your instrument and then, do not touch it! Let the conductor be the interpreter of volume and dynamics thenceforth. The distortion that might occur in quadruple fortissimo is nearer to truth than your sudden lowering of the volume to piano in a passage marked "FFFF." Very often, a record's grooves have been irritated and damaged by dust, old needles, a heavy or unsuitable tone arm, or the like. Cactus or fibre needles will "cover up" those unpleasant vibrations, and it is true, too, that needles of that description will cause less wear and emit a mellower tone quality than metal needles. On the other hand, the brilliance and transparent tone reproduction of some of the newer types of metallic needles is unsurpassed.

At any rate, be happy in the knowledge that the greatest portion of the masterworks of the musical art have been recorded for all time and are at your command. Think of the most thrilling concert you have ever attended or the most thunderous climax in a Bach fugue, when every reed and pipe at the celebrated organist's command seemed about to burst with vibration. Then think, too, that those very vibrations are waiting, prisoners in a microscopically narrow groove, on a piece of inanimate material, anxious to be released by a sharp needle—and you may have some idea of the picture involved. Such is the achievement of records!

And although we have pointed out some of the phases of records and record-listening, we feel that the personal pleasure to be found in them is also the most obvious attribute of good music. MUSIC, which is here and gone in the very moment it occupies in listening to it, and for that reason, the most elusive of the arts—is at its best in records. Here, in recorded sound, find yourself in reflections of your varying moods . . . When you are aware of the caressing nature of that which is Debussy, the stormy and virile Beethoven, the architectonic and massive Bach, the strength and pungent sonority of Brahms, the dramatic and passionate Wagner, the pathetic and lyric Tschaikowsky, the lovely, irridescent Chopin, the sparkling staccato of Rachmaninoff, the sensational and dramatic Richard Strauss; the haunting, mornful Shostakovich, the magnitude and depth of Sibelius and the eerie and orgiastic character of Stravinsky, then only, will you know the transmutation of that which is called the inner self. Then only will you know that these great masters of the art are the reverberations of life, of your very self, if you will. In them, find those powerful and subtle experiences which are the consummation of Existence and which are yours forever in recorded music.

Judging Phonographs

By RICHARD Q. WEDDELL

WITH the recent drastic reductions in the prices of recordings, many more people than ever before are probably considering building a library of recorded music — and they will have to start with a machine.

The latest and finest discs are made with a more extended treble range than heretofore. The treble now reaches almost five octaves above Middle C, matching the earlier, successful attempts to encompass the bass. Since only phonographs manufactured during the last few years reproduce these more brilliant and broader-ranged records adequately, it is best to acquire an up-to-date machine to insure satisfactory performance of all the sound that is actually engrooved on the records. It is certainly not very effective to employ a machine limited in projection for the playing of discs made with extensive treble and bass. That is about as sensible as owning an entire house and trying to raise a large family without ever entering the cellar or ascending to the second floor, when these two sections are perfectly usable.

The purchaser should look first for tone in a phonograph. However, checking with salesmen, it is amazing to find that appearance of the machine is, in most cases, the sole requisite that is ever considered. The buyer seems to assume that reproduction by all machines is of standard excellence. (This is not the case). Therefore, he thinks it only necessary to select a piece of furniture that will fit attractively into his living room.

In some ways, this represents a more healthy attitude than has hitherto prevailed, and it has forced the appearance of a number of handsomely-cabineted machines in welcome contrast to their predecessors. Previously, most machines were not remarkable for beauty of appearance. A good many were monstrous contrivances that smote the eye and sent the aesthetic senses staggering with the first frightening impression that they were a new kind of apartment-sized sarcophagus. Somehow, there was a crescendo of ugliness as the years passed; this probably reached its height in the hideous mounted boxes that were advertised in England in the middle thirties. They still make some beauties there, but now they lack the shattering effect of those clumsy monuments to bad taste that made British magazines worth skimming.

Today, the makers of phonographs realize they must strike a better balance between the sight and sound of a machine, so that, in the catalogue of one prominent manufacturer, for example, you can find illustrations of models in Chippendale, Georgian, Sheraton and Heppelwhite styles. These particular models are sky-high above the purse of the ordinary purchaser, but the tendency to produce a phonograph that is also a good piece of furniture is becoming more wide-spread.

Nevertheless, this question of appearance, though undeniably important, is not the whole story and at least equal consideration should be given to the quality of tonal reproduction. As a matter of fact, a great number of people would think that the tone is the only factor to be considered. However, they undoubtedly hope the mechanism that sounds best to them is not unattractively housed.

Several years ago, the perfect record with which to test a new machine was the first one in the set of Strauss' tone-poem Also Sprach Zarathustra with its opening in which there is a rising trumpet call over a low, mysterious rustle, then full chords, the pounding of a kettle drum and an enormous soaring orchestral climax, reinforced by organ, believed to have been "perhaps the greatest volume of sound ever engraved on a record." This tested not only the treble, but also the power of the machine to reproduce a thundering roar. And if the instrument held out, it was usually a sale.

But even this extraordinary document for its time has been improved upon in clarity and fidelity to timbre. The vibrant power and red-blooded vigor of Karl Böhm's performance with the Saxon State Orchestra (imported) of another Strauss tone-poem Don Juan, with its lushly romantic interludes, is a constant challenge to the recording apparatus. On a good machine, the different strata of instruments, so to speak, are just as clear as the conductor intends them to be, and perfectly fused when it is combined effect at which he is aiming.

Listen to the beginning of Copland's El Salon Mexico, that hot tamale of the repertoire of American music, with its abrupt crashes on the cymbals—like drunken outlaws streaking through town and peppering the night-sky with gun fire. Then listen to the various instrumental solos at later points—just before the tango on the second face, for instance. Do they sound natural on that particular phonograph? See how closely the sounds as reproduced by the machine approximate the corresponding sounds you would hear from these instruments in actual performance.

Again, try the glittering, whirling, crowded carnival sequence that opens Strawinsky's ballet Petrouchka in the recording by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. How near to the real thing do these fireworks approach?

Well, perhaps you are a classicist and you do not like or understand the moderns. Then give this machine that is a prospective buy a spin with the second movement of Mozart's lovely Haffner Symphony in the recording by Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic. Is the marvelous string texture revealed? See how faithfully the smooth and close-blended sound of the orchestra comes out—with the little irresistibly beckoning figure in the strings. If that is a reliable phonograph you are playing, it should.

These are all orchestral examples. Ask to hear some of the latest recordings of art songs, opera, chamber music and piano and judge them critically for natural tone rather than a tone that is "canned" or "fuzzy."

The overtones which appear in high frequency recordings are not equally apparent to the ears of every individual. Because of this, modern phonographs are equipped with tone controls so that they may be adjusted to suit the player's taste. Unfortunately, to catch the full brilliance and impact of true orchestral color, the treble must be turned up on many machines; thus one hears the noise of the needle moving over the record surface, a noise that has been diminished in volume through experiments and improvements but which has not yet been entirely eliminated. Do not let it bother you, unless it is unusually loud, because in most cases you will not notice this drawback, at all, after a short while.

RECORDING MELOTONE STUDIO

WHEN one star of the musical firmament turns to MELOTONE for lifelike reproduction, that might be something to be secretly proud of—

BUT when an endless chain of the world's foremost singers, instrumentalists, conductors and composers place their faiths in MELOTONE, that's something for MELOTONE to put on the record . . .

If the machine "booms" or sounds shrill, regulate the tone controls, but be certain that in order to obtain a pleasing sound you have not cut down the bass and treble ranges so much that the color of the record is lost. Many machines are made with single tone controls, while others have separate controls for both treble and bass (usually on the higher-priced machines). The dual control is preferable since it permits regulation of either bass or treble ranges without affecting the other, and a maximum of both ranges at the same time; but it should not be the all-important factor in determining your choice.

Listen to the various makes of machine carefully and to different examples of the same model, because occasionally these are not uniform and some may be slightly better than the rest. In making comparisons, it is wise to use the same record in rotation on all machines, comparing the same passage or passages. Obviously, some records will be kinder to the tone than others and do not offer an opportunity to judge critically. Also make certain that a new needle is used on each machine, for a needle that has been used too often will make even the best machine ineffectual.

Do not be over-awed by the number of tubes. As long as your phonograph is loud enough for you to hear plainly and without distortion, the number of tubes is inconsequential. It is important for apartment dwellers who must keep the volume on their speakers down (there are neighbors you know!) to ascertain the electrical output, measured in watts, of the machine. The greater the electrical output, the less possibility of distortion of tone on low volume and the more varied the color effects. Compare the machines with volume at a low point, for that is how you will be operating the machine very often.

Any well-designed speaker larger than eight inches in diameter should cover the necessary range from 5,000 to 7,500 cycles per second. Now about the baffle. The baffle is the partition upon which the speaker is mounted. It is used to prevent the sound from the backside of a loudspeaker from coming around and cancelling that from the front side (Do you follow?). As a result, it improves the bass response. So the larger the baffle, the better the bass tone. For this reason, many people prefer a speaker in a separate cabinet where the baffle gets more space than in a regular phonograph cabinet (but such an arrangement is very rare).

To increase the life of your records, be sure the pick-up (the arm holding the needle) is as lightly balanced as possible. The maximum weight applied to the record should not exceed an ounce and one-half. There is varying opinion as to the virtues and defects of crystal and magnetic pick-ups. A good crystal pick-up will cost $15 or more; a cheap one is bad to own. Disadvantages of a crystal pick-up are its extreme fragility and its inability to withstand high temperature (125F). So if you are living on or near a desert, it is definitely out. I do not suppose this eliminates most of you, however. A good magnetic pick-up is better than a good crystal. It is more durable and less subject to resonances, but the output is less and requires more amplification than a crystal.

As to needles, use whichever kind sounds best to you. Cactus will not give you as much brilliance or treble reproduction as steel, so if you want to inspect thoroughly the "second floor" or a piece of modernism that is as gaudy as a witch-doctor, you will be happy with the second variety.

Note on automatic record changers: According to many authorities, these generally harm the records, but if you are overjoyed to escape the exercise of continual record fetching-and-flipping, they will probably be worth it to you. (Most record albums are now obtainable for automatic changers—be certain to designate what type of album you desire in making your purchase.)

Your problem in choosing a phonograph is easier if you have only a limited amount of money to spend, because the field of choice will be narrowed by the absence of some of the refinements mentioned, and they will be out of reach of troubling you. However, having found the best machine in the price range you have selected, you have at your command a medium of providing yourself with unlimited pleasure and beauty.

The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra

By ARTUR RODZINSKI

THE Cleveland Symphony Orchestra which I have the honor to conduct now for the eighth year, and which is entering into its twenty-third season, is an ensemble of eighty-two virtuosi. In twenty-two years it has played eight hundred and fifty-six concerts in twenty-five states, in Canada and Cuba, having toured since its first season.

At home, in Cleveland, in addition to the two regular subscription series in Severance Hall there has been added a series of twelve Sunday "Twilight" concerts at popular prices. Last year, four additional all-star popular concerts were given in the Cleveland Public Auditorium to audiences of six to eight thousand for each concert. We also joined forces with the Ballet Russe, with which we give a series of performances annually, also in the Cleveland Public Auditorium. The summer "Pop" concerts performed by the symphony personnel were attended by seventy thousand persons last season. These concerts are sponsored by the Musical Arts Association which supports the orchestra. One of the most interesting and most satisfying activities of the Cleveland orchestra is its series of educational concerts which were begun in its first season. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that the entire music appreciation work in the public schools in Cleveland is based on the music played at the children's and young people's concerts which last year drew more than forty thousand students.

I am the second conductor to have mounted the podium of the Cleveland orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff, my predecessor, having wielded the baton from 1918 until 1933. The orchestra came into being through the initiative of Mrs. Adella Prentiss Hughes, who had brought Cleveland's interest in symphonic music to a very high estate by presenting internationally famous orchestras in some 150 concerts under the direction of such famous conductors as Dr. Karl Muck, Victor Herbert, Richard Strauss, Leopold Stokowski and many others, between 1901 and 1918.

We, of the Cleveland Orchestra, feel ourselves most fortunate in the possession of our own magnificent home, Severance Hall, the tenth anniversary of which is being celebrated this Winter. Severance Hall was built expressly for the use of the Orchestra as a gift of the distinguished philanthropist, John Long Severance, who led an effective campaign for its endowment, and the Musical Arts Association has been highly instrumental in assuring the growth of the organization. It is assisted by the Friends Of The Cleveland Orchestra, which came into being in 1938. The "Friends" association maintains a campaign fund which affords the contributors to the fund the privilege of attending an orchestral rehearsal, a broadcast, and a concert planned and presented by the orchestra for the special benefit of the "Friends."

One word about the operatic performances in Severance Hall — I have had the pleasure of presenting works by Wagner, Strauss, Bizet, Puccini, Verdi, Rossini, Rubinstein, and Shostakovich. As a matter of fact, the performance of Shostakovich's Lady Macbeth of Mzensk was the first outside of Russia. This presentation was later carried to New York, orchestra and production intact, and repeated at the Metropolitan Opera House under sponsorship of the League of Composers.

In the vestibule of Severance Hall leading to the foyer, is a marble tablet with this inscription from Plato: "Music is a moral law. It gives a soul to the universe, flight to the imagination, a charm to gaiety, and life to everything. It is the essence of order and leads to all that is good, just, and beautiful." It is the aim of the entire personnel of the Cleveland Orchestra to give to Cleveland music that will serve the high purposes which are expressed in these words.

Philharmonic Symphony On The Air

By DEEMS TAYLOR

YOU do not have to be told that the broadcasts of the Sunday afternoon concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society are heard by millions of people. Everybody says it, and then adds, "wonderful, isn't it?" But have you ever stopped to think just how wonderful? Suppose we consider a few statistics.

The orchestra was founded in 1842, and by the end of the 1939-40 season had given 3,525 concerts. Let us assume that the average attendance at every one of those 3,525 concerts was 2,500 persons (a generous estimate, by the way). That means that, up to now, 8,812,500 people have heard the orchestra in concert.

The radio engineers estimate that the Sunday afternoon broadcasts are picked up by 4,500,000 receiving sets in the United States and Canada. They also estimate that two persons, on the average, are at every receiving set. Now multiply the number of sets by the average number of listeners, and you get 9,000,000.

In other words, every Sunday afternoon the Philharmonic-Symphony Society is heard, on the air, by more people than had heard it, in concert, during the ninety-seven years of the Society's existence! Even that is not the whole story. Of the theoretical 2,500 persons who attend a Philharmonic-Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall, more than half that number are subscribers; which means that the same people attend over and over again. The radio audience is composed of nine million different people.

Think of it: If it were possible to build an arena large enough to hold all of its radio hearers, the orchestra would face, every Sunday afternoon during the concert season, an audience equal to the combined populations of Norway and Sweden. The idea is a bit frightening, and one commentator, at least, tries not to think about it.

But the thing that impresses me even more about this audience, as I have come in contact with it, through the mail, is not its size alone, but its genuine interest in the music, and understanding of it. Equally impressive is the fact—if the mail be any evidence—that it numbers as many men as it does women. If this be so, then America is really justified in calling itself a musical country. No art is in a healthy state that is supported by only one sex; and while American women have always supported music, and music in this country owes them an incalculable debt of gratitude for having kept it alive, American men have been, traditionally, as bored with music as their women-folk were interested in it. That tradition, if it ever had any basis of truth, has one no longer. The broadcast concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony society are heard and commented upon, intelligently, and often profoundly, not only by educators and professional men, whose interest one might take for granted, but by merchants, factory workers, W.P.A. and C.C.C. workers, day laborers, garage proprietors—people in every imaginable trade and walk of life.

It is not only an appreciative one, this radio audience. It is an exacting and critical one. Its opinions are impartial. Its estimates of the merits of a conductor, for example, are not affected in the least by the grace or awkwardness of his gestures, the cut of his coat, the style of his haircut, or the authority of his back. It judges him solely on the basis of what sounds he draws from the orchestra, of how successfully he brings to life the printed score that lies before him.

This is no audience of bored dilettantes or tired experts; it is a vast assemblage of people who listen to music for no other reason than that they love it—the most rewarding and exciting audience, in my opinion, for which any orchestra could play.

Psychological Aspects In Playing

By M. GRUPP

MIND-CONTROL is as important in playing an instrument as it is in all other activities of the human body. A great majority of musicians are slaves to "lack-of-confidence-in-playing," which gives rise to the emotion of fear. This fear throws out of control those physical apparatuses employed in wind and in all other musical instrument playing.

It stands to reason that no matter what may be the degree of his playing ability an instrumentalist will find that the fear complex keeps him from performing to the best of his ability, and destroys what should be, for him, the natural way of playing. Some musicians play in an inferior manner not because they cannot manipulate their instruments, but simply because of the lack of coordination between their thinking processes and physical actions.

The one who hopes to be an efficient instrumentalist must, during the act of playing, first acquire the habit of coordinating the mind with the breathing, finger, tonguing, and lip muscle apparatuses. In order successfully to eliminate lack of confidence, fear, worry, nervousness, and other complexes in playing, and thus succeed in using his physical equipment to the best advantage, the player must also acquire self-control. Once the mind does become the controlling factor of his playing, and the physical equipment with which it works on the instrument, namely, the breathing apparatus, tongue, lips, etc., responds as intended by nature, the instrumentalist becomes a truly efficient performer.

It does not follow that every instrumentalist should employ his physical apparatuses in the same manner: just as there are no two human beings possessing identical fingerprints, so there are no two wind-instrumentalists whose breathing apparatus, tongue, mouth and lip muscles, and so forth, are built and function exactly alike. Therefore, common sense dictates that each wind-instrumentalist shall control these apparatuses in his own individual and natural manner while playing. The adoption of the foregoing psychological playing-elements makes it possible for the student to acquire natural breathing, tonguing, and lip-muscle actions, and thus aids him in eliminating his playing-difficulties.

To students, and to those professional instrumentalists who, although successful for a time, have in late years acquired playing-difficulties which have weakened their ability, and to those always dissatisfied with their performances because of playing-troubles, this may be said: "No matter what your playing difficulties are, no matter how long ago and in what manner they were acquired, one may be reasonably certain that they were greatly increased by destructive-to-playing complexes, which in themselves are the result of incorrect (unnatural) habits of playing, lack of confidence, fear, worry and, above everything else, a wrong mental attitude."

To realize how true this fact is, one has only to consider the brain and nervous system, their functions, how they control the body in general. Especially must one recognize the important part they play in controlling the physical organs and muscles employed in wind-instrument playing for the accomplishment of range, correct lip formations, attack, natural breath control, and other factors.

The brain, a great mass of nerve cells, lies in the top of the head and is connected with the spinal cord which runs down through the backbone. Coming from the brain and from the whole length of the spinal cord are a great number of nerves which spread throughout the body. Each of these nerves is linked to that portion of the skin or to that muscle with which it is associated.

There are sensory nerves (nerves of sense and impression) and motor nerves (nerves of motion). With few exceptions, these nerves are connected with every part of the body.

The sensory nerves convey impressions and the motor nerves function in obedience to these impressions. Assume that you hold your hand in something rather hot. After a certain time the heat becomes unbearable; the sensory nerves immediately telegraph the condition of the hand to the brain. Thereupon the brain, through the motor nerves, instantly sends the muscles of the arm an order to remove the hand. The arm muscles at once contract and withdraw the hand. This entire process works as quickly as the blinking of an eye.

It is thus understood that besides thinking, feeling, and other functions, the brain, through its wires (nerves), with the assistance of the spinal cord, is the conductor of all bodily movements, tensities, and relaxations.

To illustrate the bearing of the foregoing facts upon wind-instrument playing, and to bring out the truth that the mind is the real player, a brief account of the brain functions essential to the achievement of high notes will be of value at this point: Let us say an instrumentalist is about to play a certain high note. In order to accomplish this, he must tense his lips to a degree so that the breath may vibrate them the required number of times necessary for the production of this particular note. Since his mind is aware that the note to be played requires a certain degree of lip tenseness, the brain immediately gives orders to the lip muscles through the motor nerves, to form and tense correctly. The muscles instantly obey and contract. Thus, due to the function of a correct habit acquired through practice, they tense to the exact degree necessary and the note in mind is played. We now perceive that the lip muscles did the work that the brain, by means of the nervous system, commanded them to do.

If one plays by correct (natural) mental-control, then the brain and the nervous system habitually utilize, not only the lip muscles, but all the physical apparatuses employed in wind-instrument playing.

Now let us assume that the instrumentalist is about to play a high note, or a flexible or fast tonguing passage, and he has no confidence that he will succeed. "Playing-fear" gains a hold and makes him nervous. Then, not only do his nerves over-tense the physical-playing apparatuses, preventing them from maintaining proper flexibility, but his mind becomes too possessed with fear to convey the correct orders for the necessary muscular movements. How then, in all common sense, can the instrumentalist perform his best under such uncontrolled mental and physical conditions?

Should the brain under these circumstances, in rare cases, succeed in giving orders to the muscles, how could the latter travel through over-tight nerves (wires) in sufficiently fast and flexible fashion for the production of the desired results? Without the necessary speed, how could the mind convey to the lips, tongue, and fingers, and to those muscles used for deep breathing, the instructions for functioning in correct and flexible fashion? And under these circumstances how could the instrumentalist perform as well as he would in the absence of fear?

It is essential to point out, in closing, that when a player fears he will fail in his work, it is a foregone conclusion that he will. On the other hand, when he has no fear of failing, the odds are greatly in his favor that he will succeed. Thus the best way to conquer fear-of-playing is to learn to be unafraid to fail — to be confident! The method of obtaining this confidence is an individual problem and it should be an integral part of the duty of every teacher to study pupils individually with the purpose of imparting it to them—for each pupil may have his own particular obstacles to overcome.

MASTER RECORD CATALOGUE

MASTER RECORD CATALOGUE

PREFACE

NOTHING LIKE IT EXISTS! OUR MASTER RECORD CATALOGUE OFFERS THE MUSIC LOVER A SERVICE NEVER BEFORE AVAILABLE. HERE, IN ONE COMPACT FORM, IS A COMPLETE LIST OF THE RECORDINGS OF THE DOMESTIC COMPANIES.

IT WAS A STUPENDOUS UNDERTAKING. LITTLE DID WE REALIZE WHEN WE STARTED WHAT A LONG, INVOLVED, AND TEDIOUS PROCESS IT WOULD BE. OUR PURPOSE HAS BEEN TO UNIFY, TO AMALGAMATE, INTO ONE BIG CATALOGUE ALL THE MATERIAL CONTAINED IN THE VAST MAZE OF CATALOGUES AND RECORD LISTINGS, MANY OF WHICH ARE NOT EVEN ARRANGED IN ANY PARTICULAR ORDER.

THE BUYER OF RECORDS WILL FIND OUR CATALOGUE EMINENTLY USEFUL, NOT ONLY IN TRACING A DESIRED RECORDING, BUT ALSO IN ASSISTING HIM TO CHOOSE THE MOST DESIRABLE WAXING OF A PARTICULAR COMPOSITION, OR THE MOST PERSONALLY APPEALING SELECTION OUT OF A GROUP OF, LET US SAY, SYMPHONIES OR CONCERTOS.

THE BUYER WILL HAVE AT HIS FINGERTIPS A COMPLETE LIST OF DISKINGS BY HIS FAVORITE ARTISTS, ORCHESTRAS, CHORAL GROUPS, JAZZ BANDS, CONDUCTORS, ETC. SHOULD THE BUYER WISH TO ACQUIRE, FOR EXAMPLE, A SONATA FOR HIS RECORD LIBRARY, HE HAS ONLY TO TURN TO THE LISTINGS UNDER SONATA AND THERE HE WILL FIND, ACCORDING TO COMPOSERS, ALL THE SONATAS WHICH ARE AVAILABLE ON WAX. SIMILARLY, HE CAN CHOOSE FROM EQUALLY COMPLETE LISTS OF QUARTETS, SYMPHONIES, TRIOS, ETC.

THE SELLER OF RECORDS WILL FIND ASSISTANCE OF MUCH THE SAME TYPE. WHEN A CUSTOMER ASKS FOR SOMETHING AND HAS ONLY A FRAGMENT OF INFORMATION, OUR CATALOGUE INVARIABLY WILL SUPPLY THE BALANCE OF THAT INFORMATION, INCLUDING THE RECORD OR ALBUM NUMBER. FOR THE GREAT MAJORITY OF HIS SALES, THE SELLER NEED ONLY CONSULT THIS ONE CATALOGUE. NO LONGER IS THERE A NECESSITY FOR KEEPING FILES OF A MASS OF INDIVIDUAL CATALOGUES AND LISTS.

MUSIC LOVERS WILL FIND HERE, IN CONVENIENT FORM, THE KIND OF INFORMATION OVER WHICH THEY LIKE TO SPEND MANY HOURS. THEY WILL SECURE FROM IT THE SAME KIND OF SATISFACTION THAT IS OBTAINED BY THE BOOK LOVER FROM A COMPREHENSIVE BIBLIOGRAPHY.

THE RECORD COMPANIES TOO, ARE LIKELY TO FIND SOMETHING OF VALUE IN OUR CATALOGUE. IT WILL CALL THEIR ATTENTION TO THE FACT THAT SOME COMPOSITIONS ARE OVER-RECORDED, SOME UNDER-RECORDED. SINS OF OMISSION OR OVER-EMPHASIS BECOME DISCERNIBLE WITH DRAMATIC FORCEFULNESS. WE WISH TO THANK THE VARIOUS RECORD COMPANIES FOR THEIR ASSISTANCE IN SUPPLYING US WITH THE INFORMATION THAT WAS NECESSARY FOR THE COMPILATION OF OUR CATALOGUE.

A SERVICE OF TWELVE MONTHLY CATALOGUES OF CURRENT RECORDINGS IS ALSO MADE AVAILABLE BY THE PUBLISHER TO EACH OWNER OF THIS VOLUME. THE MASTER RECORD CATALOGUE AND MONTHLY SERVICE ARE A SOURCE OF INFORMATION ON RECORDINGS WHICH IS UNRIVALLED — A SIGNIFICANT AND IMPORTANT CONTRIBUTION TO THE RECORD INDUSTRY.

MASTER RECORD CATALOGUE

NOTE: This catalogue lists and cross-indexes, in alphabetical order, the recordings of the domestic companies released up to approximately July 15, 1940.

Only those records which are yet available to the public have been listed—not what the record companies call "cut-outs." Foreign importations are not listed because of the war in Europe and thus the difficulty of obtaining them.

All records are listed under performing artists. Classical recordings are cross-indexed under titles, program titles, names of composers, conductors, and, if compositions are part of a larger opus, under both titles. Titles of popular tunes have been cross-indexed only where the term "standard" is applicable to them.

All titles starting with an article (English or foreign) are listed under first letter of the next word.

Composers are indicated by brackets; performing artists or groups by italics. Where listing is complete, album numbers are followed by individual record numbers. If a recording is part of an album, this likewise is indicated and the individual record number is given.

A table of abbreviations is listed below for ready reference. It should not be necessary to consult the table frequently, since the abbreviations have been devised with the aim that they be self-explanatory.

HANDBOOK OF MUSIC HISTORY

BY DR. HANS ROSENWALD

NOW IN SECOND EDITION (First edition published in July, 1940)

HANS ROSENWALD, Ph.D. in Musicology of the University of Heidelberg, was formerly a music Counsel for the German Broadcasting Stations, Music Director of the Lessing Hochschule in Berlin, and one of the best known lecturers on art and music in Europe. After being confined in a concentration camp for four months he escaped from Germany and came to the United States in 1936. He recently became a citizen of the United States, and is now Chairman of the Department of Musicology at the Chicago Musical College, has lectured in New York, Chicago, Rochester, Washington, Kansas City, New Orleans and many other cities of musical culture, specializing in lecture-recitals for music lovers and lay audiences, and works as music counsel, editor, columnist and critic. He is the author of several compositions and books on music. This is his first book in English.

THE HANDBOOK OF MUSIC HISTORY is designed for teachers and students, but it will also be of service to the music lover as a ready reference in question and answer form, surveying the entire field of musical history.

Handsomely bound in a simulated moire binding, in gold and blue.
Price $1.25 Postpaid

Read what outstanding American Musicians and Critics say about Dr. Rosenwald's "Handbook"

A FEW OF THE COMMENTS:

RUDOLPH GANZ, Pianist, Conductor, President of the Chicago Musical College—
"My advice to musicians, teachers, students, music-lovers and ambitious artists: get close to Dr. Rosenwald's Handbook and become acquainted or reinformed with all the interesting data that have made music history such a fascinating study. This unusual handbook is the most complete short-cut to general musical background that I know."

HOWARD HANSON, Composer, Educator, Director of the Eastman School of Music—
"Hans Rosenwald's Handbook is a most compact and most useful volume."

NICOLAS SLONIMSKY, Musicologist, Author, Composer, Lecturer—
"I have read the handbook of Music History, and I find it very handy for quick reference. Also the definitions and analyses are fine and always to the point."

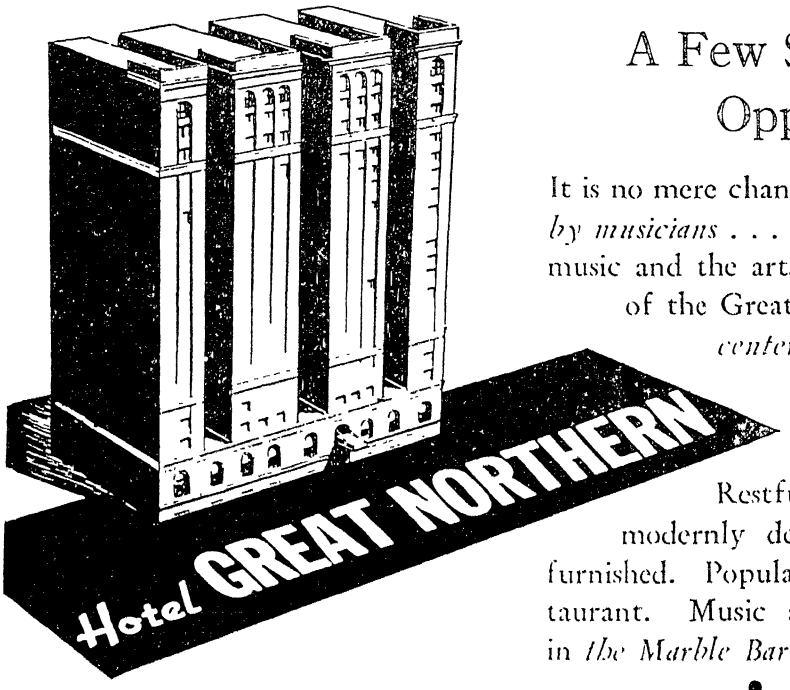
KARL W. GEHRKENS, Educator, Editor, Author, Chairman of the Department of School Music, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio—
"I have gone through Dr. Rosenwald's book rather carefully and find it to be a highly valuable compendium of information. I recommend it especially to candidates for the master's degree for use in preparing for an oral examination."

FRANCIS J. PYLE, Professor of Theory and Musicology, Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa—
Rosenwald's Handbook is compact, accurate and covers the essential facts of a college course in Music History. I propose to have it in the hands of my classes as supplementary material."

WARREN STOREY SMITH of Boston Sunday Post—
"This little volume of 346 questions and answers is remarkably complete and covers the history of music from antiquity to our immediate day with plentiful emphasis upon music in America. Mr. Rosenwald knows his stuff all right."

ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN of San Francisco Chronicle
"I find Rosenwald's Handbook extremely helpful, intelligent and worthwhile."

EUGENE STINSON of Chicago Daily News
"Mr. Rosenwald's undebatable grasp of Music History presents itself in a series of flashes which make it fascinating reading. For the teacher and for the student it will have its intended value of codifying all the information available in more copious dictionaries and textbooks. Rosenwald has compiled a tremendously useful and valuable book, one that will interest the musician because of its novel arrangement and the forcefulness of its consideration."



EUGENE ORMANDY, Conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra
"I always felt the necessity of exactly such a handbook. I never felt that there was one exactly just like Rosenwald's and I am welcoming it."

DAVID EWEN, Author, Critic, Editor of Musical Facts
"Students of music will find this volume indispensable, will find themselves referring to it again and again in order to refresh their memories. But laymen will find this book no less significant. Whatever question may arise in their minds about the musical past will, in all probability, be found posed and answered in this book. The answers are succinct, to the point, and full of sound information."

EDWARD BARRY of Chicago Tribune
"I believe that nowhere in a similarly priced book can one find such a wealth of information. The simplicity and succinctness of its presentation should add greatly to its usefulness."
